At a meeting of the Bourbon Board of Control of the Burley Tobacco Society—held Monday, I was agreed with the district to make no attempt to pool the 1919 crop of tobacco. Bourbon county is one of the strongest anti-pooling counties in the tobacco district. Less than 500,000 out of a total of 8,000,000 pounds produced in 1939 being pooled. The high prices received by the poolers for their crop of tobacco and the corresponding disappointment of the poolers, and having their money tied up, has dissuaded them from doing so. We have heard no effort has been made or is being made to pool the Clark county crop, although this year the same has been the case. The reasons prevailing in Bourbon county there is a feeling of resentment grow out of the removal of the heavy head tax on tobacco in Lexington, which will in turn naturally with the demon-

By the parole of Jesse Hatton, a negro serving a life sentence from Madison county for murder, a famous case was recalled. Todd had been the first to mention a parole on the strong recommendation of Judge James Beeson and it was thought to be unusual when the alleged grinner, who the case was freed. Hatton a white man, was convicted and sentenced to die for the murder of his brother. It was charged during the trial that the two had conspired to go to the gallows, the understanding being, according to the witnesses for the Commonwealth, that the negro would kill the king, and Todd charged that the negro was weak and would not kill the man, and Todd took the gun from him and killed his brother. This was in 1894 and Governor Bradley, in prison to begin their sentence. In 1899 Senator Bradley, the Governor, pardoned Todd, and the negro continued in prison. As has been said, sixteen years

JUST THE THING FOR OUTDOOR WORKERS.

From recent indications there will be very little, if any, of the 1940 crop of tobacco grown in Shelby county. More than two weeks ago the planter for the coming year were sent from headquarters of the Board of Control with instructions to plant the largest possible acreage, but thus far not a man has been put in the field, nor a single contract signed. The attitude of the individual growers, who have hitherto been loyal to the Burley Tobacco Society, is that they are tired of pulling for the benefit of those outside of the pool. A tremendous crop was grown in Shelby county last year. Practically all of it was sold to the buyers, who marketed it at big prices, but the pooled tobacco, which represents about 50 per cent. of the whole, is still in the grower's hands. He is waiting for a market with no definite prospect of sale in the immediate future. The local leaders in the society have no hesitation in recommending that the growers go up to the buyers to make the first move. It is a sufficient number of them and Getting in a Hurry. A dispatch sent out from Covington says, that in view of the fact that Mayor Craig has no intention of signing the ordinance granting to the Cincinnati, Louisville, Lexington and Mayville traction line the right to build its tracks and operate cars through the city of Covington, the officials of that road will probably change their plans and not enter Covington at all. They point to the fact that Mayor Craig signed at once the ordinance for the Covington and Big Bone traction line, and say that two weeks is sufficient time in which to consider their matter. They want to begin the construction of the line, and say something must be done immediately.

When he completed his work Mr. Huey returned these lists along with those taken by him to the supervisor, who returned to accept them and notified him that he must take the census of the town of Burlington, consequently he came in from Georgetown, last Friday, and on Saturday did the work in the town of Burlington, consequently the town has been enumerated twice to the 1910 census.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold struggle upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangard, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both parties are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore get into a tangle with the Appleweight gang. Valuable papers in the Appleweight camp are discovered by the office of Guy Osborne and Griswold places the "heat" on the governor of the state. The scheming attorney general, Ardmore, character a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Appleweight. Jerry Dangard, in a guest at Ardmore.

When they sought a lonely siding to allow a belated passenger train to pass, the conductor brewed coffee and cooked supper, and Ardmore called in the detectives, and trainmen. The sense of knowing real people, whose daily occupations were so novel and interesting, touched him afresh with delight. These men said much in few words. One of the detectives chaffed Cooke covertly about some adventure in which they had been jointly associated.

"I never thought they'd get the lead out of you after that business in Missouri. You were a regular mine," said the detective to Cooke, and Cooke glanced deprecatingly at Ardmore.

"Here the little joker, all right." "You can't kick," remarked the detective. "I've done it tried."

Before the train started the detectives crawled back into their car, and Cooke drew out some blankets, tossed them on a bench for Ardmore, and threw himself down without ado. Ardmore held to his post in the tower, as long as the lookout in a crowd. The night air swept more coolly in as they neared the hills, and the train's single brakeman came down as though descending from the sky, rubbed the elders from his eyes, and returned to his vigil armed with a handful of Ardmore's cigars.

For the greater part of the night they enjoyed a free track, and thumped the rails at a lively clip. Morning after midnight Ardmore crawled below and went to sleep. At five o'clock Cooke called him.

"We're on the switch at Kildare. One of your men is here waiting for you."

Big Paul, the German forester, was called in, and Ardmore made his toilet in a puff of water while listening to the big fellow's report. Cooke joined in the conversation, and Ardmore was gratified to see that the two men met in common ground in discussing the local geography. The forester described in clear, straightforward English just what he had done. He had distributed his men well through the hills, and they were now posted as pickets on points favorable for observation. They had found along the streams four widely scattered stills, and these were being watched. Paul drew a small map, showing the homes of the most active members of the Appleweight gang, and Ardmore indicated all those points as nearly as possible on the county map he had brought with him.

"Here's Raccoon creek, and my own hand runs right through there—just about here, don't it Paul? I always remember the creek, because I like the name so much."

"Did you see the sheriff at Kildare?" "I haven't seen him. When I asked for him yesterday I found he had left town and gone to Greensboro to see his sick uncle."

Ardmore laughed and slapped his knee. "Who takes care of the dungeon while he's away?" "There are no prisoners in the Kildare jail. The sheriff's afraid to keep any; and he's like the rest of the people around here. They all live in terror of Appleweight."

"Appleweight is a powerful character," said Cooke, pouring the coffee he had been making, and handing a tin cup to Ardmore. "He's tolerable well off, and could make money honestly if he didn't operate stills, rob country stores, mix up in politics, and steal horses when he and his friends need them."

"I guess he has never molested us any, has he, Paul?" asked Ardmore, not a little ashamed of his ignorance of his own business.

"A few of our cows stray away sometimes and never come back. And for two years we have lost the corn out of the crib away over here near the deer park."

"We don't want to lose our right to the track, and we must get out of this before the whole community comes to take a look at us," said Cooke, swinging out of the caboose.

Ardmore talked frankly to the forester, having constant recourse to the map; and Paul sketched roughly a new chart, making roads and paths as far as he knew them, and indicating clearly where the Ardley boundaries extended. Then Ardmore took a blue pencil and drew a straight line.

"When we get Appleweight, we want to hurry him from Dilwell county, North Carolina, into Mingo county, South Carolina. We will go to the county town there and put him in jail. If the sheriff of Mingo is weak-kneed, we will lock Appleweight up anyhow, and telegraph the governor of South Carolina that the joke is on him."

"We will catch the man," said Paul gravely. "But we may have to kill him."

"Dead or alive, he's got to be caught," said Ardmore.

Cooke came out of the station and signaled the engineer to go ahead.

"We'll pull down here about five miles to an old spur where the company used to load wood. There's a little valley there where we can be hidden all we please, so far as the main line is concerned, and it might be a bad idea to build headquarters there. We have the tools for cutting in on the telegraph, and we can be as independent as we please. I told the agent we were carrying company powder for a blasting job down the line, and he suspects nothing."

Paul left the caboose as the train started, and rode away on horseback to visit his pickets. The train crept away from the spur into the old wood-cutter's camp, where, as Cooke had forecast, they were quite shut in from the main line by hills and wood-land.

"And now, Mr. Ardmore, if you would like to see fire-water spring out of the earth as freely as spring water, come with me for a little stroll. The thirty or so members of the Appleweight gang, and Ardmore indicated all those points as nearly as possible on the county map he had brought with him.

"Here's Raccoon creek, and my own hand runs right through there—just about here, don't it Paul? I always remember the creek, because I like the name so much."

"You are right, Mr. Ardmore. The best timber you have lies along the creek, and your land crosses the North Carolina boundary into South Carolina about here. There's Mingo county, South Carolina, you see."

"Well, that doesn't hurt," exclaimed Ardmore, striking the table with his fist. "I never knew one state from another, but you must be right."

"I'm positive of it, Mr. Ardmore. One of my men has been living there on the creek to protect your timber. Some of these outlaws have been out there off our guard."

"It seems to me I remember the place. There's a log house hanging on the creek. You took me by it once, but I never entered my head that the state line was so close."

"I'll be shot if I haven't seen that calico before," said Ardmore; and he sat down. "Under and drew out the stopper, while Cooke watched him with interest."

The bit of twine was undoubtedly the same that he had unwound before in the room at the Guilford house, and the cork parted in his fingers exactly as before. On a piece of brown paper that had been part of a tobacco wrapper was scrawled:

This ain't your fight, Mr. Ardmore. Where's the governor of North Carolina? That's a new one on me," laughed Cooke. "You see, they know every thing. Mind-reading isn't in it with them. They know who we are and what we have come for. What's the point about the governor?"

"Oh, the governor's all right," replied Cooke. "Governor," I said, "I wouldn't bother his head about a little matter like this. The powers reserved to the states by the constitution give a governor plenty of work without acting as policeman of the jungle. That's the reason I said to Gov. Dangard, 'Governor,' I said, 'don't worry about this Appleweight business. Time is heavy on my hands,' I said. 'You stay in Raleigh and uphold the dignity of your office, and I will take care of the trouble in Dilwell.'" And you can't understand, Cooke, how his face brightened at my words. Being the brave man he is, you would naturally expect him to come down here in person and seize these scoundrels with his own hands. I had the hardest time of my life to get him to stay at home. It almost broke his heart not to come."

And as they retraced their steps to the caboose, it was Ardmore who led, stepping briskly along, and blithely swinging the jug.

CHAPTER X.

Prof. Griswold Takes the Field. Barbara and Griswold stepped at the telegraph office on their way back to the executive mansion, and were met with news that the sheriff of Mingo had refused to receive Griswold's message.

"His private lines of communication with the capital are doubtless well established," said Griswold, "and Bonworth probably warned him, but it isn't of great importance. It's just as well for Appleweight and his friends, high and low, to show their hands."

When they were again on the way, Griswold lingered for a moment with no valid excuse for delay beyond the loveliness of the night and his keen delight in Barbara's voice and her occasional low laughter, which was so pleasant to hear that he held their talk in a high key, that he might evoke it the more.

"You have done all that could be asked of you, Mr. Griswold, and I cannot permit you to remain longer. Father will certainly be here tomorrow."

"Oh, but your father isn't absent. He is officially present and in the saddle," laughed Griswold. "You must not admit, even to me, that he is not here in full charge of his office. And as for my leaving the field, I have not the slightest intention of going back to Virginia until the Appleweight ghost is laid, the governor of North Carolina brought to confusion, and the governor of South Carolina visibly present and thundering his edicts again, so to speak, ex cathedra. My own affairs can wait, Miss Osborne. The joy of having a hand in the last affair like this, and of being able to tell my friend Tommy Ardmore about it afterward, would be sufficient. Ardmore will never speak to me again for not letting him to a share in the game."

Peasant Girl's Treasure. Members of the well known Romanian family of Ghika, who are resident in Vienna, received some interesting information from Jassy today, says the London Telegraph. A number of cases filled with objects of gold and silver, with jewelry and diamonds, estimated to be worth several million kronen, were found in the course of a search made by the police in the house of a peasant woman named Sifta Bradinaru, living in the environs of Jassy.

The woman, who was at once arrested, stated that the cases had been concealed in her house for 25 years. Her deceased daughter was in the service of Prince Nikolai Ghika, who died suddenly after an operation in Paris. The peasant's daughter Maria took several sealed cases which she once appeared to want, and conveyed them to her home. She was afraid to attempt to dispose of the valuable objects, which have until now remained hidden in her mother's house.

The Limit. "My only daughter eloped. And I'll never forgive her!" "Now, look here, old man, remember—"

"Remember? Yes, I'll be damned if I don't."

MORE TO THE POINT.

Mr. Wise—I don't see why that new millionaire is so popular. He can't even express himself.

Mr. Wise—No, but he can pay the freight.

AWFUL BURNING ITCH CURED IN A DAY

"In the middle of the night of March 20th I woke up with a burning itch in my two hands and I felt as if I could pull them apart. In the morning the itching had gone to my chest and during that day it spread all over my body. I was red and raw from the top of my head to the soles of my feet and I was in continual agony from the itching. I could neither lie down nor sit up. I happened to see about Cuticura Remedies and I thought I would give them a trial. I took a good bath with the Cuticura Soap and used the Cuticura Ointment. I put it on from my head down to my feet and then went to bed. On the first of April I felt like a new man. The itching was almost gone. I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and during that day the itching completely left me. Frank Gridley, 225 East 43rd Street, New York City, April 27, 1909. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world; Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props, Boston, Mass."

Gentlemen Two. Two street cleaning department men were having an altercation as they were driving their carts side by side along upper Broadway the other afternoon. One was red-faced and bulbous-nosed, the typical "bummy." The other was an adobe-headed negro. Both looked utterly disreputable.

"Get out of my way!" yelled the red-faced man. "Don't cher know enough to get out of my way when you see a gentleman?"

"I'm more of a gentleman than you, you big rum," retorted the negro. "You'll drive a garbage cart, an' I only picks up ashes."—New York Press.

Do His Cuffs Need a Shave? Ever notice sometimes a man's cuffs have whiskers? His collar, too? Know what does that? It is a friend to fabrics and an enemy to dirt. It doesn't cost a whit more than the bad kinds of soaps, but it pays for itself ten times over in the saving of clothes and trouble and health.

A Witty Bishop. "The late Bishop Posa," said a Philadelphia physician, "once visited me for some trifling ailment. 'Do you, sir,' I said to him, in the course of my examination, 'talk in your sleep?'"

"No, sir," he answered. "I talk in other people's. Aren't you aware that I am a diviner?"

His Last. Poet's Wife—My husband read this poem at a public celebration before thousands of people. Alas! it was the last poem he ever wrote. Publisher—I see. Did they lynch him or shoot him?—Leslie's Weekly.

The Real Hero. "So Biggles has written a historical novel?" "Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "Who is the hero of the book?" "The man who has undertaken to publish it."—Washington Star.

An Effectual Cure. "She wants to be a sister to me." "You can easily get her out of that notion."

"How?" "Treat her as you would a sister."

Domestic Notes. "I've noticed one thing." "And what is that?" "When one gets loaded it's usually his wife who explodes."

enjoyable. Miss Hudson instructs in elocution and Miss Whitson in music, and the pupils showed a great aptitude from the efforts of these able instructors, and rendered an excellent program.

At the Ladies Home Mission Society, which met Sunday afternoon at the Methodist church, plans were perfected for a song and praise service to be held on the evening of June 11th. This service will be conducted entirely by the young ladies and children of the church, and they promise quite an interesting program.

The society has been doing good work during the year, the service Sunday afternoon being well attended. The presence and words of encouragement from Mrs. Elisha Hudson were especially appreciated.

If there is one thing more certain than another, it can be truly said that the dumper will not enjoy the benefits of a strong tobacco market this fall at the expense of the poolers. It is possible and even more than probable, that a goodly percent of the 1910 crop will be pooled before it is ready for market. On just what terms this will be done is a matter yet to be decided by the growers.

It may be that when the 1909 pooled tobacco is sold that a contract for the 1910 pooled tobacco will be included in the deal. If this kind of deal could be consummated, then the dumper would be given an opportunity of discovering the pleasures of "holding the bag."

We do not use the word "dumper" as a slur on the nonpooler, but use it simply because of no other word can be found that is so appropriate. For years the Trust was recognized as the bitterest enemy of the pool, but it later developed that the dumper is entitled to the cromo.

One thing is certain, he has "rid" his last ride, unless he is willing to ride side by side with the pooler—Georgetown News.

The wonderful effect of the "force of habit" was strongly illustrated a few evenings since, when a prominent local retired physician on leaving the home of a sick friend to whom he had made a friendly call, on leaving the hall, picked up the medicine case of the attending physician and started home. He walked several squares before it dawned upon him that he had sometime since entirely quit practicing medicine. He quickly retraced his steps and was gently depositing the medicine case in the hall where he had just before picked it up when the attending physician came out of the sick room in time to give him the laugh for being such an easy victim to the "force of habit." Of course, no one in Georgetown could guess the name of the victim—News, Georgetown, Ky.

Mother's Day at Erlanger.

Erlanger Christian Church observed Mother's Day very appropriately last Lord's day morning. Long before services began the beautiful edifice was filled to overflowing with visitors and regular attendants.

A feature of the day was the graduation of the Junior Class to the Intermediate Department, consisting of about twenty pupils, who received their training under the watchful care of Miss Laura Lucas. The children proved themselves a credit to their tutor and pastor. Their presence of mind in answering the examination questions was truly wonderful, and especially so in naming in order, the sixty-six books of the Bible.

Many an eye dimmed with tears as the little ones were presented with their diplomas, and to each, a bible, gifts of the school.

It was indeed a Mother's Day, and much to her satisfaction, as she realized the extent of christian training her child had received at Sunday School, and that some one had refused to think it too much trouble to teach and to train other peoples children. No, it is not too much trouble. Not when it is your child.

So, dear friend, if to-night, amidst the rain and sleet, a poor, drunken boy on the street, you should meet; remember his mother is praying for him. Oh! tell him of Jesus, and take my boy in; he's some mother's boy, no matter who he be; true love never falters at a dear mother's plea.

At Harrodsburg, a local option town, a man was tried in the police court and fined for the illegal sale of liquor. He appealed to the Circuit Court and proved that the liquor was sold in Lawrenceburg, a saloon town, but that it was delivered in Harrodsburg, where the pay for it was collected. Judge Sautley held that the seller had a right to collect for his goods wherever delivered and could not be punished for it.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Malone Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to get the sons of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Applegate, an outlaw with great political influence. One of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Applegate. Usable reasons in the Applegate case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold places the theft at the door of the scheming attorney general. Ardmore charts a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Applegate. Jerry meanwhile is a guest at Ardmore's Ardmore's house takes the field.

He was more buoyant than she had seen him, and she liked the note of affection that crept into his tone as he spoke of his friend.

"Ardmore is the most remarkable person alive," Griswold continued. "You remember I spoke of him this morning. He likes to play the inscrutable idiot, and he carries it off pretty well; but underneath he's really clever. The most amazing ideas take hold of him. You never could imagine what he's doing now. I met him accidentally in Atlanta the other day, and he was in pursuit of a face—a girl's face—that he had seen in a car window for only an instant on a siding somewhere. He declared to me most solemnly that the girl winked at him!"

Griswold was aware that Miss Osborne's interest in Ardmore cooled perceptibly. "Oh!" she said, with that delightful intonation with which a woman utterly extinguishes a sister.

"I shouldn't have told you that," said Griswold, guiltily aware of falling temperature. "He is capable of following a wink of an eye at a perfectly respectful distance for a hundred years, and of being entertained all the time by the joy of pursuit."

"It seems very unusual," said Barbara, with cold finality.

Griswold remembered this talk as, the next day, aboard the train bound for Turner Court House, the seat of Mingo county, South Carolina. He pondered a telegram he had received from Ardmore. He read and re-read this message, chewing clogs and scowling at the landscape, until the cause of his perturbation of spirit may be roughly summarized in these words:

On leaving the executive mansion the night before, he had studied maps in his room at the Saluda house, and carefully planned his campaign. He had talked by telephone with the prosecuting attorney of Mingo county, and found that official politely responsive. So much had gone well. Then the juxtaposition of Ardmore's estate to the border, and the possible use of the house as headquarters, struck in upon him. He would, after all, generously take Ardmore into the game, and they would uphold the honor and dignity of the great commonwealth of South Carolina together. The keys of all Ardmore's houses were now to speak in Griswold's pocket, and invitations were unnecessary between them; yet, at Atlanta Ardmore had made a point of asking Griswold down to help white away the tedium of Mrs. Atchison's house party, and as a matter of form Griswold wired from Columbia, advising Ardmore of his unexpected descent.

Even in case Ardmore should still be abroad in pursuit of the twinkling eye, the doors of the huge house would be open to Griswold, who had entered there so often as the owner's familiar friend. These things he pondered deeply as he read and re-read Ardmore's reply to his message, a reply which was plainly enough dated at Ardley, but which, he could not know, had really been written in a caboose 600 miles as it lay on a siding in the southeastern yards at Raleigh, and thence dispatched to the manager at Ardley, with instructions to forward it as a new message to Griswold at Columbia. The chilling words thus hung at him were:

Prof. Henry Malone Griswold, Saluda House, Columbia, S. C.: I am very sorry, old man, but I can't take you in just now. Scarlet fever is epidemic among my tenants, and I could not think of exposing you to danger, as soon as the accused plague passes I want to have you down.

An epidemic that closed the gates at Ardley would assume the proportions of a national disaster; for even if the great house itself were quarantined, there were lodges and bums scattered over the domain, where a host of guests could be entertained in comfort. Griswold reflected that the very fact that he had wired from Columbia must have intimidated to Ardmore that his friend was trying to ward him, pursuant to the Atlanta invitation. Griswold disclaimed a thousand speculations as unworthy. Ardmore had never shown the remotest trace of noblesse, and as far as the threatened house party was concerned, Griswold knew Mrs. Atchison very well, and had been entertained at her New York house.

The patronizing tone of the thing caused Griswold to flush at every reading. If the Ardley date line had not been so plainly written; if the phraseology were not so charged with wit, there might be room for doubt; but Ardmore—Ardmore, of all men, had slapped him in the face!

But, scarlet fever or no scarlet fever, the pursuit of Applegate had precedence of private grievances. By the time he reached Turner Court House Griswold had disclaimed the ungraciousness of Ardmore, and his jaws were set with a determination to perform the mission entrusted to him by Barbara Osborne, and to wait until later for an accounting with his unaccountable friend.

Arrived at Turner, Griswold strode at once toward the courthouse. The contemptuous rejection of his message by the sheriff of Mingo had angered Griswold, but he was destined to feel even more poignant insolence when entering the sheriff's office, a deputy, languidly posed as a letter "v" in a swivel-chair, with his feet on the mantel, took a cob pipe from his mouth and lazily answered Griswold's importunate query with:

"The sheriff ain't here, seh. He's a-visitin' his folks in Tennessee."

"When will he be back?" demanded Griswold, hot of heart, but maintaining the icy tone that had made him so formidable in cross-examination.

"I reckon I don't know, seh."

"Do you know your own name?" persisted Griswold sweetly.

"No, seh," replied the deputy. He reached for a match, lighted his pipe, and carefully crossed his feet on the mantel-shelf. The moment Griswold's steps died away in the outer corridor the deputy rose and bustled himself so industriously with the telephone that within an hour all through the Mingo hills, and even beyond the state line, along lonely trails, through hills and through valleys, and beside cheery creeks and brooks, it was known that a strange man from Columbia was in Mingo county looking for the sheriff, and Applegate, alias Fotedale, his men were everywhere on guard.

Pondered a Telegram He Had Received.

Griswold liked the prosecuting attorney on sight. His name was Habersham, and he was a youngster with a clear and steady gray eye. Instead of the southern statesman's flowing Prince Albert, he wore a neck-coat of gray flannel, and was otherwise distinguished by a shirt of white and blue check. He grinned as Griswold bent a puzzled look upon him.

"I took your courses at the university two years ago, professor, and I remember distinctly that you always wore a red cravat to your Wednesday lectures."

"You have done well," replied Griswold, "for I never expected to find an old student who remembered half as much of me as that. Now, as I understood you over the telephone, Applegate, who is the thief, is still at hand in this county by the last grand jury, but the sheriff has failed or refused to make the arrest. How did the grand jury come to indict if this outlaw dominates all the hill country?"

"The grand jury wanted to make a showing of virtue, and it was, of course, understood between the foreman, the leader of the gang, and the sheriff that no warrant could be served on Applegate. I did my duty," said Griswold, "but the grand jury's act was, ex-emplary; and the wheels of justice are blocked. The same thing is practically true across the state line in Diwell county, North Carolina. These men, led by Applegate, use their intimate knowledge of the country to elude pursuit when at times the revenue men shoot at a raid, and the county authorities have never seriously molested them. Now and then one of these sheriffs will make a feat of going out to look for Applegate, but you may be sure that due notice is given before he starts. Three revenue officers have lately been killed while looking for these men; and the government is likely to take vigorous action before long."

"We may as well be frank," said Griswold in his most professional voice. "I don't want the federal authorities to take these men; it is important that they should not do so. This is an affair between the government and the citizens. It has been said that neither of them dare press the matter of arrest, but I am here to Gov. Osborne's behalf to give the lie to that imputation. Gov. Osborne has been vigorously aligned. Suppose all these people were arrested in Mingo county under these indictments, what would be the result—trial and acquittal?"

"Just that, in spite of any effort made to convict them."

"Well, Gov. Osborne is tired of this business, and waits the Applegate scandal disposed of once and for all."

"That's strange," remarked Habersham, clearly surprised at Griswold's vigorous tone. "I called on the governor in his office at Columbia only ten days ago, and he put me off. He said he had to prepare an address to deliver before the South Carolina Political Reform Association, and he couldn't take up the Applegate case; and I called on Bosworth, the attorney general, and he grew furious by angry, and said I was guilty of the most malicious falsehood in not having brought these men to book long ago. When I suggested that he consult with the governor toward removing our sheriff, he declared that the governor was a coward. He seemed anxious to put the governor in a hole, though why he should take that attitude I can't make out, as it has been generally understood that Gov. Osborne's personal friendliness for him secured his nomination and election to the attorney generalship, and I have heard that he is engaged to the governor's oldest daughter."

"He's a contemptible hound," replied Griswold with feeling, "and at the proper time we shall deal with him; but it is of more importance just now to make Applegate a prisoner in North Carolina. If he's arrested over there, that lets us out; and if the North Carolina officials won't arrest their own criminals we'll go over in Diwell county and show them how to be good. The man's got to be locked up, and he'd look much better in a North Carolina jail, under all the circumstances."

"That's good in theory, but how do you justify it in law?"

"Oh, that's the merest matter of formulae! My dear Habersham, all the usual processes of law go down before emergencies!"

The airiness of Griswold's tone caused the prosecutor to laugh, for this was not the sober associate professor of admiralty whose lecture he had sat under at the University of Virginia, but a different person, whose new attitude toward the law and its enforcement shocked him immeasurably.

"Well, as I told you over the telephone, we hear a great deal about Applegate and his crowd, but we never hear much of their enemies, who are, nevertheless, of the same general stock, and equally determined when aroused. Ten of these men I have quietly called to meet at my farm, and they are due from town on Thursday night. They come from different points over the country, and we'll have a small but grim posse that will be ready for business. You may not know it, but the Applegates are most religious. Applegate himself boasts that the over-the-church on Sunday. He goes also to the mid-week service on Thursday night, so I have learned, and thereby hangs our opportunity. Mount Nebo church lies off here toward the north. It's a lonely point in itself, though it's the spiritual center and headquarters of a wide area. If Applegate can be taken at all, that's the place, and I'm willing to make the trial. Whether to stampede the church and make a fight, or seize him alone as he approaches the place, is a question for discussion with the boys I have engaged to go into the game. How does it strike you?"

"First rate. Ten good men ought to be enough; but if it comes down to numbers, the state militia can be brought into use. The South Carolina National Guard is in camp, and we can have a regiment quick enough, if I ask it."

Habersham whistled.

A Strange "God Tree."

What is a god tree? Nobody knows, or had ever heard of such a thing until, not long ago, an ethnological explorer came across quite a lot of them on certain tiny known islands along the west coast of Sumatra.

The god tree is carved out of wood, with curiously fashioned branches of the same material. On these branches are hung strings of bright colored bits of cloth and tiny baskets filled with grains of rice. The whole affair is not more than three feet high.

According to the belief of the natives of the islands aforesaid, a god lives in the tree. He is not a particularly good sort of divinity and, if he takes a notion to leave the tree he is liable to do folks a mischief. The best way to persuade him to stay at home in the tree is to make the latter attractive by adorning it in the manner described and by supplying rice in baskets for the god to eat.

The god is a household god and the tree which he inhabits is kept in a corner of the family dwelling.

Woman as Bank Officer.

Both the paying and the receiving tellers in the Maiden Lane Savings bank of New York are young women. In a circular recently issued the officials of the bank commended these two women for their efficiency, accuracy and the general excellence of their work. Since they have been in office no shortage of cash has been found and they readily detect discrepancies in signatures and are unvaryingly correct and courteous to patrons of the bank.

Whole Country is Stirred.

One of the most interesting reports at the recent meeting of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis was that of the executive secretary, Dr. Livingston Farrand, showing the growth of the anti-tuberculosis movement since May 1, 1909. The number of associations for the prevention of consumption has increased from 290 to over 425; the number of sanatoria and hospitals for the treatment of tuberculosis is from 293 to 400; and the special tuberculosis dispensaries from 222 to 265. During the year 1909, thirty-six out of forty-three legislatures in session considered the subject.

And in 23, bills were passed for the prevention or treatment of this disease. Since the opening of the legislative season of 1910, out of ten legislatures in session up to May 1, all have considered the subject of tuberculosis and every one of them has enacted some law that bears on this subject.

When Company Comes.

If there's one thing above all others that makes a woman feel desperate it is to have company drop in unexpectedly. Any day, and no knowing when her table-cloth is to be changed, that her table-cloth is to be changed from the last washing and the minkys worn in holes and dingy looking. If she had used Easy Task laundry soap her table-cloth would have been spotlessly white and she could be proud of it. Easy Task soap is the enemy of dirt and the friend of fabrics of all kinds. Try it next Monday and you'll rename washday to Easy Task day.

AN INTOLERABLE ITCHING

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but grew steadily worse until, when I could not stand my hair any longer, raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch. I tried many different remedies to heal. Combining my hair with active torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep for some time, the awful stinging pain would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies and apply them to my scalp. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humors. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first Grua Mills and the last time three boys were sent to the reformatory for a long treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

My dear, unthoughtful, unsolicited friend, I take pleasure in writing this, it hoping my experience may help someone else. Miss Lillian Brown, R. F. D. 1, Liberty, Mo., Oct. 29, 1908."

How He Expressed It.

Every small boy—the right kind, anyway—thinks his own mother the symbol of all perfection. Few, however, are so fortunate as to express their admiration as prettily as the little hero of the following anecdote:

Richard's mother was putting him to bed, and as she kissed him good night, he said, "I don't know you are the whole world to mamma."

"Am I?" he answered, quickly. "Well then, you're heaven and the north pole to me!"—Youth's Companion.

Woman Caught Red Handed.

A woman was caught red handed last Tuesday. There was nothing sensational about it. All she had done was to dip her hands in the soap suds of a yellow laundry soap, and the result was as it always is, that her hands were cracked and chapped and chafed until they were sights. Easy Task soap relieves a woman of so much rubbing and dipping her hands in water that so harmful results matter not. Easy Task soap is good to wash the hands with. It won't hurt the most delicate skin any more than the finest lace.

How one woman doesn't enjoy her hands another praised.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(Furnished by Supt. Riley.)
 The Boone County Teachers' Institute will be held the week commencing July 25.

The court of appeals has decided that colored schools in graded school districts must be maintained on the three trustee system. This means that three colored trustees must be appointed for the Walton colored school.

The students of the Richmond Normal School certainly have an opportunity to do good work. The faculty is composed of strong men and women. Morality and moral teaching seems to be the spirit of this institution. With the training of this great teaching force we are to see a new advance in the efficiency of our public schools. Teachers, the opportunity is yours, possess it. The next term opens June 14th.

The convention of Superintendents certainly was a success. Strong speeches were made, and several candidates for Superintendent of Public Instructions were present.

Teachers' examination Friday and Saturday of this week; also the commencement of the Walton High School is Friday night of this week.

The following common school pupils were examined last Friday and Saturday for graduation in the common school branches: Alma Masters, Constance, Leola Clore, Elizabeth Jackson, Mattie Kreich, Courtney Kelly, Burlington.

Essie Morehead, Taylorport. Henry Criger, Ruth Regenbogen, Hebron. Sadie Lea Snyder, Charles R. Bradford, Florence. James Popham, Pt. Pleasant. Wilford Tanner, Gunpowder. Reuben W. Hager, East Bend. Finance-Senior, Tanner, Ky.

Police--All the committeemen appointed to represent the several lodges in this meeting.

The meeting adjourned. It is the desire of the several lodges in the county to make the rally on the 16th of July, the largest fraternal event in the history of the county. The speakers for the possible to secure. Good music will be on the ground, and after the speaking is concluded, which will be not later than 2 p.m., the large dancing pavilion will be cleared, and the young people who delight in the amusement will be allowed to trip the light fantastic toe the remainder of the afternoon.

Everybody will be expected to attend, and as an occasion of the kind can not be a success without plenty to eat, a large number of baskets well filled with provisions brought by the good people of the county will be very much appreciated by the members of the order and especially by those who will have charge of the occasion.

This is the year that the seventeen year locusts are due again, and in a few weeks they will make their appearance on the farms in the middle west. At least authorities on locust lore and superstition are sure they will, and the past. No one seems to know exactly where the seventeen year locusts come from, but it is a matter of record that they do show up regularly just the same.

The thing that is interesting the farmers and the old-timers most is whether they will bring a "W" on their wings or a "P" as is hoped. "W" on a seventeen year locust's wings means war. There is no reason under the sun that is known as to why it should be always a W or a P, but those are the only two letters that have been noticed.

Locust lore experts have a good deal of statistical backing when they assert that when the W is on the wings it will surely mean war, and if the P is on the wings it will just as surely mean peace. In 1888, the last time the locusts were here, says an old commercial traveler, the wings bore a decided W, and we promptly got into war with Spain. In 1871 I saw the wings myself, and following that we had peace and plenty.

Some of the old generations of farmers have records in the old family bible to prove that the former visitations of the seventeen year locusts prosaoped the Mexican war by hearing W on their wings. The farmers are not anxious to have them come, but they are all superstitious as to their verity as harbingers. When you come to think about it, this letter business seems like a very foolish superstition. But when you know that they do bear the W or the P, and that the locusts have never failed, how are you going to explain it?

Where is Your Hair?

In your comb? Why so? Is not the head a much better place for it? Better keep what is left where it belongs! Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, quickly stops falling hair. There is not a particle of doubt about it. We speak very positively about this, for we know.

Ayer's
 Formula with each bottle. Show it to your doctor. Ask him about it, then do as he says.

There is a difference of opinion as to the damage done to the fruit crop by the frost. All of it was not killed. There will be some apples, peaches and pears. The strawberry crop will be a short one. There ought to be a fair crop of raspberries and blackberries.--Georgetown Times.

Of the possible 13,000 fleeces of wool in this county 10,656 are in the pool. For this wool of which there will be about 50,000 pounds, there will be eight or ten bids. If the death rate among the sheep in the Burlington precinct the past few months has prevailed in the other precincts in the county at least ninety percent of the wool in Boone county is pooled. The average weight per fleece under normal conditions is about five pounds, but this average may be reduced this season on account of the large number of sheep that have shed their wool partially, in some Old Boys' Cords the entire fleece being lost. The cause of this unusual loss of wool from the sheep is not understood by the owners, and is attributed to various causes.

The Greatest CLOTHING SALE OF IT'S KIND Ever Given in

Covington will begin

Friday, May 20th.

We have purchased the entire surplus stock of Spring Clothing from Sandford, Varner & Co., MAKERS of CRITERION BRAND, located at 3rd and Race Streets, Cincinnati, Ohio. This firm is one of the largest wholesale houses in Cincinnati, making nothing but HIGH GRADE MEN'S and YOUNG MEN'S CLOTHING. The stock is larger than we could expect to move in one season, but not wanting to miss such an opportunity to buy this season's make at so great a reduction, and give my friends and patrons the benefit of this grand purchase; we bought this stock at 60c on the dollar at manufacturing cost. You may wonder why they sold such fine goods at such low prices. This is the why. They never carry any goods over from one season to the next, and knowing the kind of goods I handle, they sent for me, as they are anxious for their goods to have a fair representation. Now, in order to move this stock in as short a time as possible, I will sell it at the same price to you.

WHICH WILL BE LESS THAN THE COST OF MANUFACTURING.

Now to give you an idea how very cheap this stock is to be sold, I will quote you a few prices:

Suits that cost to manufacture $5.50 our sale price..... $3.50
 Suits that cost to manufacture $7.50 our sale price..... $5.00
 Suits that cost to manufacture $9.50 our sale price..... $7.00

Suits that cost to manufacture $12.00 our sale price..... $9.50
 Suits that cost to manufacture $15.00 our sale price..... $11.50
 Suits that cost to manufacture $18.00 our sale price..... $13.50

Now, to make this sale the Greatest Reduction Sale of the season, and make new friends, I have decided to make a BIG REDUCTION in every department of our Store. The line of CLOTHING, FURNISHING GOODS, HATS, MEN'S SHOES that we carry, needs no introduction in this part of the country, as there is none better to be had. This will be a great opportunity for you to get the best at less than one-third regular price. Pick the best early as they won't last long at prices quoted.

Singer Talks

Important Points of Sewing Machine Construction

1 Did you ever consider what the thousandth of an inch might mean in the adjustment of the needle-stroke on a sewing machine?

2 Or how many little invisible parts there are which may run well for a month or so in a carelessly-made machine, and then by going wrong render it utterly useless?

3 For the perfect construction and thorough testing of these vital details you must depend upon the honor and reputation of the maker.

4 The makers of the Singer Sewing Machine enjoy a reputation vouched for by millions of Singer users all over the world.

5 These millions of Singer users have proved the perfection of the Singer by years of steady sewing.

6 The Singer Sewing Machine is built like a watch and runs like one.

Singer Sewing Machine Company

HORACE HEWITT, MANAGER, PHOENIX 101-Y, AURORA, ILL.

Harry Roberts, who was preparing to grow a considerable acreage of tobacco on the farm of Robert Carver, which adjoins the town, has been forced to abandon his intention, the smoke being destined to all the tobacco growers.

R. B. Huey, of Commissary neighborhood, began setting tobacco, last Thursday. He planted in new ground, where he thought that the cut worms would not disturb it, but he was more than disappointed, as all the tobacco was destroyed.

The 19th of June next will be the one hundred and eighteenth birthday of Squire Sam Sanders, residing in a quaint log cabin home back in the foothills of the Cumberland mountains, some twenty miles from Whitesburg, Ky. He is probably the oldest as well as one of the most remarkable persons living in this country. Among his legions of acquaintances he bears the familiar sobriquet of the "old squire," or "Squire Sam." He is still hale and hearty, and enjoys his three and a half month's day, and looks many years younger than the old family Bible tells it.

Sanders was visited recently by a Sunday World correspondent and a camera man who were right royally entertained by the venerable "Old Squire," while listening to tale of pioneer days, of Indian warfare and rebellion.

Squire Sanders' eyes have been preserved remarkably. He says his sight is better than when he was 50 years old. He is rightly considered the crack shot of all the mountain section in which he hunts. He is a great mountaineer, a very rapid walker. With his endurance and speed in walking, he never found much advantage in saving himself a horse save for what little farm work he engaged in.

Judging from his sound, white teeth, one would declare the "Old Squire" has a set that was artificial. He has cut his third set of teeth in recent years and maintains his food as well as the average young man. Twice each week he shaved himself—too without the use of a mirror—still using the old razor handed down by his venerable father, Thomas Sanders.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing in his life is the fact that while for three-quarters of a century Sanders' hair has been gray, a few months ago he began coming out and in its stead came a crop of black hair. This seems too strange to believe, but hundreds who have visited the venerable mountaineer have seen the apparently miraculous rejuvenation of this old man. The story is well authenticated. There certainly are few gray hairs in Sanders' head today.

Many stories are told of the aged man's surprising strength and agility. During a recent visit of his son, Sanders, Jr., aged 24, the latter attempted to mount a flight of stairs, but calling him back the son hundred and eighty years old father remonstrated. "Don't do that, son, you'll fall; just watch me," as he skipped up the stairs with the agility of a boy. It was the old "Old Squire" joke, but in reality he was fearful of the safety of his son.

Taking all in all Squire Sanders is the central figure of the section of Kentucky that for more than a century has been his home. He is the father of twenty-three children, all of them living in a radius of a dozen miles having thousands of descendants, all of whom are very proud of the oldest ancestor.

Sanders has been six times married under the laws of the commonwealth of Kentucky. Four of his wives died, while divorce proceedings caused one separation. To his present wife, his sixth wife, on the matrimonial sea, he has just been married eight years, having wedded her on the eve of his one hundred and tenth birthday. She was in her seventy-fifth year.

A total eclipse of the moon will be visible to the observers in this country on the night of the 28th inst., beginning near 10 o'clock p. m. and ending near nine minutes after midnight.

A prize tobacco raiser informs the Carroll News, that on account of depreciation in the fertility of the soil, the tobacco crop matures two weeks later, every year for the past ten years, and therefore, tobacco set after the tenth of June has small prospects.

Why is it that no one wants to live in the country anymore? The cities are full of people who live from "hand to mouth" and those total wealth is represented by the clothing they have on. Years go by and these people never have a home. They lose that independence that the proud owner of a farm has. If there is one needed reform, it is to keep people on farms and away from cities.

The Mt. Sterling Democrat says that last year Sam Turley, a leading farmer of Montgomery county, bought three gilts for which he paid $27. From them he got his meat hogs for a large family, the value of hogs killed being fully $225, sold ten at $22 apiece, for $218 and has three sows left, one with eight pigs, and one due to pig in a few days, all valued at $75; a total of $316 from an investment of $27 in one year. Who can beat this and what business would beat it?

The report of the Northern Kentucky Teachers' Association on the result of cigarette smoking by the young boys, which is the result of one year's observation by the members has been made public. Of the 688 pupils using tobacco, 141 had lost one year in school, and 58 had from two to seven years back in their studies. In some of the schools fifty per cent have been in the same grade for two or more years. The report points out many physical wrecks as the results of the habit, and requests parents to demand that no more cigarettes be sold to their sons.

A novel case was decided by the Kentucky Court of Appeals, recently. In a case before a justice of the peace, the justice announced from the bench that he would decide in favor of the plaintiff, but in a later opinion, and after he had left the bench, he decided for defendant and so entered his decision on his record. The plaintiff brought suit to force the justice to stick to his original opinion, but the Court of Appeals decided that he had a perfect right to change his opinion, and that no judgment is final till after it is entered in the judgment book and signed by the judge or justice.

No money will be paid to the teachers in the country schools during the month of May, and if the teachers get no money during the month of June they will be lucky. Capt. Ed Farley, State Treasurer, said that he was doing his best to get together money enough to pay the teachers, but prospects of getting the $400,000 required before the latter part of June do not seem very flattering.

School teachers in Kentucky will not have to wait so long for their salaries as they had expected and will get their checks for the last two months of the present term in the first week of June if not on June 1. It was thought some weeks ago that the teachers could not be paid before the last of June, but Capt. Farley finds that he will have on hand, by the first week in June, enough money to pay all the teachers, and he has so announced.

WORLD'S SUPPLY OF IVORY

Ten Thousand Elephants Slaughtered Yearly to Meet the Demand for the Product.

In spite of the great demands of the arts and trades for ivory, the quantity imported at Antwerp, London and Liverpool, the principal markets of the world, remains almost constant. The total was 416 French tons in 1938 and 469 tons in 1939. In the years between it has been as high as 638 tons.

Antwerp was unknown as an ivory market 30 years ago, but now supplies London in the size of its trade, owing to the opening of the Congo region.

Occasionally tusks are found weighing 150 pounds, but one of 30 pounds is considered a fine specimen. The law in both India and the Congo forbids the export of tusks weighing less than six pounds.

But even allowing 100 pounds a pair, the amount taken to Europe in a year means the death of more than 10,000 elephants, probably twice that number, for many elephants are killed that yield no ivory, females, for instance.

The price varies from $1 to $3 a pound, according to quality.

Civilization and Eyesight.

It is sometimes mistakenly supposed that primitive races have naturally better eyesight than civilized ones. That is not exactly true. Nature works more slowly than that, and in the records of power or acuteness of eyesight some French artillerymen proved to be as well furnished as the most keen-sighted Arabs. Native races often appear to have keen eyesight simply because they know what to look for and where to look for it. But as soon as reading is introduced to a race short-sightedness begins to appear with progressive frequency, and some striking instances of this relation to cause and effect have appeared among the school children of Egypt.

Illusions.

It is true we labor under many illusions, but if these were to be done away with we should hardly deem it worth our while to labor at all.

Almost none of the things which man so ardently pursues in the belief that they will make him happier is really capable of doing so, and yet it is needful that he keep up the pursuit for the sake of what he incidentally achieves in behalf of destiny.

The illusions we labor under partake, in fine, of the nature of sanitary conditions, though they chiefly affect the health of the spirit, and by that have no municipal functionary appointed to look right after them. Nor, in fact, do they need any such municipal provision as has been as kind as to see to it that illusions we shall always have.—Puck.

JEWS IN UNITED KINGDOM

Number Under a Quarter of a Million and Are Mainly in the Big Cities.

According to statistics there are at the present time about 330,000 Jews in the United Kingdom, mainly in London and the other large cities of England. The Jews being rated among the greatest merchants in the world, it is but natural that they should flock to the cities where the widest field for their industry is to be had.

In England there is a popular saying that there are no Jews in Scotland. Although this is not literally true, it is a fact that there are not many of them in that part of the United Kingdom. Mark Twain is authority for the statement that in the last half hundred years only one Jew has lived in Scotland. He says that one moved to Edinburgh, and before he realized it the country Scots had him so well trimmed of his worldly goods that he never afterward had enough money to escape from the country. It is feared, however, that the humorist has slightly exaggerated the story.

There are comparatively few Jews in Ireland, the large majority of the 330,000 being in London, Liverpool and two or three others of the largest English cities.

Just as they do in this country, the Jews of England ask no other race to assist them in the maintenance of their own poor. Through well-organized charities they take care of all the poor and destitute, raising nearly $1,000,000 annually for religious and benevolent purposes.

What is Education?

"Education," says Professor Huxley, "is the instruction of the intellect in the laws of nature, under which name I include not merely things and their forces, but men and their ways; and the fashioning of the affections and of the will into an earnest and loving desire to move in harmony with those laws. For me, education means neither more nor less than this. Anything which professes to call itself education must be tried by this standard; and if it fails to stand the test, I will not call it education, whatever may be the force of authority, or of numbers, upon the other side."

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara, a young woman, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry, the son of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to all the above of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Ardmore, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, Barbara and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Applewhite. Valuable papers in the Applewhite case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold blames the theft on the daughter of the governor of North Carolina. Ardmore chatters a cable and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Applewhite. Jerry meanwhile, is a guest at Ardley. Ardmore's position is taken by Jerry, plotting to the same end as Ardmore, is also scouting the border with a posse.

CHAPTER XI.

Two Ladies on a Balcony.

The outer aspect of Ardley is, frankly, feudal. The idea of a North Carolina estate had grown out of Ardmore's love of privacy and his wish to get away from New York where his family was all too frequently struck by the spot light. The great tract of land once secured he had not concerned himself about a house, but had thrown together a comfortable bungalow which satisfied him for a year. But Ardmore's gentle heart, inaccessible to demands of many sorts, was a defenseless citadel when appeals were made to his generosity. A poor young architect, lately home from the Ecole des Beaux Arts, with many honors but few friends, fell under Ardmore's spell. The towers and battlements that soon thereafter crowned the terraced slopes at Ardley, etching a noble line against the lovely panorama of North Carolina hills, testified at once to the architect's talent for adaptation and Ardmore's unshakable balances at the Bronx Loan and Trust Company.

On a balcony that commanded the sunset—a balcony bright with geraniums that hung daintily over a ravine on the west, Mrs. Atchison and Miss Jerry Dangerfield were sitting. Their tea, their white gowns, the snowy awning stirring slightly in the hill air, the bright trifles of the tea-table mingled in a charming and contentment.

"Wonder," said Mrs. Atchison abruptly, "where Tommy is."

"I have no definite idea," said Jerry, pouring cream, "but let us hope that he is earning his salary."

"His salary?" said Mrs. Atchison's brows contracted. "Do you mean that my brother is taking pay for this mysterious mission he is doing?"

"He shall be paid in money," replied Jerry with decision. "As I have only the barest acquaintance with Mr. Ardmore, never, in fact, having seen him until a few days ago, it would be very improper for me to permit him to serve me except under conditions that govern the relations of employer and employee."

Mrs. Atchison smiled with the wide tolerance of a woman of the world; and she was a lady, it must be said, who had a keen perception of that same simple philosophy of life which proceeds, we may say, for the sake of convenience, from the sense of humor. She did not like to be puzzled; and she had never in her life been surprised, least of all by any word or deed of her singular brother Tommy. She liked and even cultivated with daring the inadvertent turns in a day's affairs. The cool fashion in which her brother had placed the daughter of the governor of North Carolina in her hands on board her car at Raleigh had amused her. She had learned nothing from Jerry of the beginnings of that young woman's acquaintance with the master of Ardley—an acquaintance which seemed to be intimate in certain aspects but amazingly distant and opaque in others. Miss Geraldine Dangerfield, like Mrs. Atchison herself, was difficult to surprise, and Tommy Ardmore's sister admired this in any one and she particularly admired it in Jerry, who was so charming in so many other ways.

"I hope," said Mrs. Atchison, putting down her cup and gazing dreamily into the west, "that you have not given Tommy any commission in which he is likely to fail."

This was, as the lady knew, almost vulgarly leading; but Jerry folded her arms, and spoke out with charming frankness.

"I have heard my father say," said Jerry, "that incapable men often rise to great opportunities when they are pushed. Mr. Ardmore has undertaken this mission for me a service of the highest delicacy and not unattended with danger. You have been kind to me, Mrs. Atchison, and as you are my chaperon and entitled to my full confidence it is right for you to know just how I came here, and why your brother is here in my service. For once curiosity bound Mrs. Atchison in chains of steel.

"Tell me nothing, dear, unless you are quite free to do so," she murmured; but her heart skipped a beat as she waited.

"I should not think of doing so except of my own free will," declared Jerry, carelessly following the flight of a hawk that flapped close by toward the neighboring woods. "It may interest you to know that just now your brother, Mr. Thomas Ardmore, is the governor of North Carolina. He does not exactly know it, for at Raleigh I myself was governor of North Carolina at the time we met and I only made Mr. Ardmore my private secretary; but when it became necessary to take the field I placed him in full charge, and he is now not only governor of the Old North State, but also the commander-in-chief of her troops in the field."

Mrs. Atchison moved and looked surprised, but evinced no other sign of surprise. The hour, the scene, the girl were all to her liking. She would even prolong the delight of hearing the further history of her brother's amazing elevation to supreme power in an American commonwealth—it was so foreign to all experience, so heavy with possibilities, so delicious in that it had happened to Tommy of all men in the world!

"I trust," she said, smiling a little, "that Tommy will not prove unworthy of the confidence you have reposed in him."

"If he does," said Jerry, clasping her hands together to free them of an imaginary sugar crumb, "I shall never marry him."

"I love you more and more!" You may tell me anything you like without fear of being misunderstood; but tell me nothing that you prefer to keep to yourself."

"If you were not Mr. Ardmore's sister I should not tell you this; and I shall never tell another soul. I was coming home from a visit in Baltimore when the train stopped somewhere to let another train pass. The two trains stood side by side for a little while and in the window of the sleeper opposite me I saw a young man who seemed very sad. So, just as my train started, at the very last moment when I was looking at each other, I winked at that gentleman with, I think, my right eye."

Miss Geraldine Dangerfield touched the offending member delicately with her handkerchief.

Mrs. Atchison bent forward and took both the girl's hands.

"And that was Tommy—my brother Tommy?"

"That gentleman has proved to be Mr. Thomas Ardmore. I had not the slightest idea that I should ever in the world see him again. My only hope was that he would go on his cheerful and refreshed by my sign of good-will, though he was either so depressed or so surprised that he made no response. I never expected to see him again in this world; and when I had almost forgotten all about him he suddenly sent in his card to me at the executive mansion in Raleigh. And I was very harsh with him when I learned who he was; for you know the Ardmore estate owns a lot of North Carolina bonds that are due on the first of June, and Mr. Billings had been chasing me all over the country to know whether they will be paid; and I supposed of course your brother was looking for papa, too, to annoy him about some mere detail of that bond business, for the state treasurer, who does not love papa, has some away from him and Mr. Billings is perfectly wild."

"Delicious!" exclaimed Mrs. Atchison. "Perfectly delicious! May I call you Jerry? Thank you, dear. Let me tell you that I am 32 and you are—"

"Seventeen," supplied Jerry.

"And this is the most amusing, interesting and exciting thing I have heard in all my life. It might be difficult ordinarily for me to forgive the wink, but your explanation lifts it out of the realm of social impropriety into the sphere of generous benevolence."

"Your brother does not seem particularly proud of his family connection," said Jerry. "He spoke of you in the most beautiful way, but he seems distressed by the actions of some of the others."

Mrs. Atchison smiled.

"Tommy is right about us. We are a sad lot."

"But he is very hard on the duke. Since I came to Ardley his grace has treated me with the greatest courtesy, and he has spoken to me in the most complimentary terms. He has beyond question a man of kind heart, for he has promised me his mother's pearl necklace, which had been in her family for 400 years."

"I should not hesitate to take the necklace, Jerry, if he really produces it for my sister, his wife, has never had the slightest glimpse of it, and it is, I believe, in the hands of certain English trustees for the benefit of the duke's creditors. I dislike to spoil one of his grace's pretty illusions, but unless Mr. Billings softens his heart a great deal toward the duke I fear that you will not get the pearls this summer."

"I must tell you as my chaperon, Mrs. Atchison, that the duke has already offered to elope with me. He told me last night as we were having our coffee on the terrace, that he would gladly give up his wife, meaning, I suppose, your sister, and the Ardmore millions for me; but while I think him fascinating I want you to feel quite safe, for I promise you I shall elope with no one while I am your guest."

Mrs. Atchison's face had grown a little white and she compressed her lips in lines that were the least bit grim.

"The scoundrel!" she exclaimed half under her breath. "To think that he would dare to do you! He is hanging about us here in the hope of getting more money, while my poor sister, his wife, is in an English sanatorium half crazed by his brutality. If Tommy knew this he would undoubtedly kill him!"

"That would be very unnecessary. A duke ought to be something, and I should hate to have the poor man killed on my account. And besides, Mrs. Atchison, I am perfectly able to take care of myself."

"I believe you to have, Jerry. But it's a terrible thing to have the duke of this family here on my property, that he must leave this place and the country."

"But first," said Jerry, "I have an engagement to ride with him after dinner to see the moon, and the opportunity of seeing a moon with a duke of this family, here on my sacred soil of North Carolina, is something that I cannot lightly put aside."

"You cannot—must not go!"

"Leave it to me," said Jerry, smiling slightly; "and I promise you that the duke will never again insult an American family. And now I think I must dress for dinner."

CHAPTER XII.

The Embarrassments of the Duke of Ballywinkle.

Mr. Frank Collins rode the Atlanta Palladium road the lies beyond Kildare with a light heart, gaily swinging on a large suitcase. He had walked far, but a narrow-brim straw hat, perched on the back of his head, and the cheery light of the waits he whistled spoke of a happy day. As he scanned the landscape he marked a faint cloud of smoke rising beyond a lonely strip of wood; and coming to a dilapidated piece of track that led vaguely away into the heart of the forest, he again noted the tiny smoke cloud. Such a day the half of the gods arrive; and the world that afternoon knew no cheerfulness apart from the Palladium's agile young commissioner. Mr. Collins was not only in capital health and spirits, but he rejoiced in that delicious utilization of expectancy which is the chief consummation of the journey. His mission was secret, and this in itself gave flavor to his errand; and, moreover, it promised adventures of a kind that were greatly to his liking.

As the woodland closed in, about him the curving spur carried him farther from the main right of way he ceased whistling and his steps became more guarded. Suddenly a man rose from the bushes and leveled a long arm at him detestingly.

"Stop, young man, stop where you are!"

"Hello!" called Collins, pausing. "Well, I'm fagged, if it ain't old Cooke! I say, old man, is the untaxed juice flowing in the forest primeval or what brings you here?"

Cooke, who he recalled the recorder, whom he remembered as a particularly irrepressible specimen of his genus whom he had met while pursuing moonshiners in Georgia. The two shook hands amiably midway of the two tracks of rust.

COOKING THE EEL IN JAPAN

Patron Chooses His Delicacy, Which Is Prepared for the Table Before His Eyes.

Entering a Japanese restaurant, a guest who wishes broiled eels and rice is led to a tank of quivering fresh water eels and bidden to point out the object of his preference. The cook, who stands by the tank, selects the wriggling victim of his choice, strikes its head smartly upon a wood block and, squatting by it, grasps the creature's neck, inserts a knife in the left side of the vertebrae and dextrously runs it down to the tail, then rapidly applying his instrument to the other side of the backbone, repeats the process, leaving the eel split open.

Then, chopping the flattened eel into three-inch lengths, the pieces are plunged into boiling water to make the skin tender, long bamboo splints used as skewers are thrust through them, and they are then placed on rods over glowing charcoal and broiled brown, being plunged from time to time into a vessel that contains old soy of the color and consistency of molasses. The preparations concluded, the steaming eels are drained and placed in red lacquer boxes with rice and sent before the customer.

If we knew all it would be easier to forgive all.

WAS A SIN ANY TIME.

Mrs. Wise-I told the next-door neighbor today that it was a sin to play the piano on Sunday.

Mrs. Wise-Why did you mention Sunday?

BABY WASTED TO SKELETON

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. They began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloth at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He ought to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk."

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment."

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

Noisy Nuisances.

Ill-fitting doors and windows represent a happy hunting ground for the disturbing winds. In fact, so annoying does the constant rattle of these openings become that many determined individuals, who refuse to admit the fresh air, choose the lesser of two evils and close the openings in preference to sleepless nights. This can be remedied if a small wedge of wood be driven in at the side of an open window; a door can be prevented from rattling if a pad or strip of thick felt be nailed on the edge of the door. The annoyance of creaking drawers can be eliminated by rubbing common soap upon the top, sides and bottom of each.

Creaking hinges on anything should be well oiled, while the grating, irritating noise of a sewing machine can be overcome in a similar manner. The little noises wear away the patience that is required for other things, were foolish to dissipate energy through the channels of irritated nerves when a little time will obviate the nuisances.

New Work for Women.

Mrs. Frederick H. Snyder is the only woman impressario on earth, she says. She decided that grand opera would be a good thing for St. Paul and made her first venture so successful that she has continued in the business, after the fashion of men engaged in the same work.

Odd Fellows' Paper?

HELP FOR THE AGED.

No Need to Longer Suffer from Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Catherine Sullivan, 1718 Madison St., Joplin, Mo., says: "Like most elderly people, I suffered from kidney trouble for years. My back ached intensely and there was a feeling of numbness in my legs. I had a cramp and the urinary passages were profuse. Doctors prescribed for me but I was not benefited. At last I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They drove my troubles away and I now enjoy excellent health."

Benefit in Outdoor Schools.

Speaking before the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, Dr. Henry Farnum Stoll of Hartford, Conn., said: "Every child should have one or more such institutions for all delicate, so-called scrofulous or anemic children, and those with tuberculosis of the bones, who are now in ordinary schools. Doctor Stoll declared that twenty to forty per cent of school children in large cities are infected with tuberculosis. By the use of sunlight, it was ascertained that 75 per cent of the children from tuberculous homes were infected against only 26 per cent of those from supposedly healthy homes. It was also found that 80 per cent of the frail children from healthy homes had the germs of the disease, but only 13 per cent of the robust children from similar homes were thus affected."

Really a Serious Dilemma.

"The chap who works on one side of me," said an office man, "has been married six weeks and he sneaks to the telephone about four times a day and calls up his wife, and then I hear him saying: 'Dear, how is your headache now? I hope you are feeling better.' Then pretty soon he comes back to his desk and goes to work again all smiling."

"The man who works on the other side of me has been married six years and he goes to the telephone only when he's called and then I hear him saying: 'Why, I can't possibly do that. I can't spare the money,' and then he comes back to his desk all scowling."

"And really, when I hear the way these two men go on I don't know what to do. I don't know whether to get married or stay a bachelor."

Importation of Leeches.

Leeches are enumerated by the bureau of statistics under its general head of animals imported, the total value of the importations of this species in 1908 having been $5,241; in 1907, $6,922; in 1906, $4,494; in 1905, $3,882; in 1904, $3,589; in 1903, $3,240; and in 1902, $2,412—the commerce in leeches being thus of a growing character. The total value of the leeches imported into the United States in the decade ending in 1908 is about $40,000. Leeches are imported for use of duty. Snails were at one time enumerated as an article of importation, the records from 1894 to 1898 showing snails imported to the extent of about $5,000; but the snail trade so dwindled, showing only $4 of imports in 1898, that the bureau discontinued its statements of this article.

Even Among the Hoboes.

"Hello, Dusty," said Weary Wagles, as the two tramps met in the street. "How's livin'?"

"Somepin awful," replied Dusty Rhodes. "The cost of everything's gone up so a feller can't hardly get his three meals per."

"Humph!" ejaculated Weary. "I never knowed you to pay for nothin'."

"No," returned Dusty, "but it's the solemn fact that along my route, where I used to have to ask only once for a breakfast, they make me ask twice these days."—Harper's Weekly.

At Carlisle many thousands of pounds of wool have been delivered. Much of it was sold some time ago at from 25 cents to 30 cents a pound, but it is now selling for much less. An effort was made to pool the crop but was not successful.

Gov. Willson has issued a proclamation, calling on the citizens of Kentucky to celebrate "Flag Day" on Tuesday, June 14th. He asks especially that the school children participate in the patriotic exercises, and taught reverence for the flag and that for which it stands.

Fifty thousand dollars was paid out in Henderson on the 17th to members of the Stemming District Tobacco Association. The payment was 25 per cent on the remainder of the 1909 crop recently sold to the English Government. The sum of $500,000 will be paid to members in Henderson, Union, Hopkins, Webster and Crittenden counties.

By some very close figuring Mr. M. Cochrane, of St. Louis, has ascertained that the farmer's share in a five cent loaf of baker's bread at the present price of wheat, is one and a half cents; the baker gets two cents; the retailer one cent, and the half cent remaining is divided between the grain dealer, the railroads, the commission man and the miller.

The Kentucky State authorities have been notified from Washington that, on account of the existence of scab among sheep, all sheep must be dipped before they can be shipped out of the State. This must be done at points where Federal inspection is required. Louisville is at present the only point prepared but other shipping points will no doubt install the necessary facilities and inspectors will be detailed for them.

W. C. Whitson tells us that he shot a crow that was setting on a nest of eggs and on going to the nest in two or three days he was surprised to see another crow setting and killed it. On another day another one was killed on the same nest, and now he goes to the nest regularly every day and kills a crow. He says that he is willing to bet that he has killed seven crows on the same nest, and as it is now mail time we can't wait to see whether he will get another one today. Log Cabin.

The Grant County News published in full Mrs. Phoebe R. Collins' petition in a suit filed in the Grant Circuit Court, recently, in which Hon. D. Linn Gooch and Robt. Childers are defendants, charging them with defrauding her out of $1,125 by selling her stock in an "Anti-Foot Box Coal Company," which the petition claims is worthless. Mr. Gooch was formerly president of the company, but resigned some time ago and Dr. G. W. McMillen, of Pendleton co., succeeded him. Mr. Gooch gives out the following statement relative to this suit:

According to statistics that have been gathered in Minnesota, it costs $12 to $15 to produce an acre of wheat. The average yield of wheat for that State is about thirteen bushels, and the price averages less than a dollar, which does not leave much room for profit when grain is being grown continuously. (With the improved methods that have been worked out it will, of course, be possible to greatly increase these yields, but they have not been put into practice extensively enough yet to make any appreciable difference in the average yields of the crops of that State.

Those who are making the most noise in opposition to the erection of the new school building at Burlington are persons who live in school districts in the county, the property in which will not contribute one cent towards the cost of the building, consequently their knowing can not be attributed to the fact that they will be taxed to assist in the work, therefore it must be prompted by their opposition to public education and advancement in the country. Gentlemen, you who will not be taxed to assist in the building of the school house at Burlington will make just as many friends by making less noise about it. If there is any kick coming it belongs to the taxpayers who will have to put up the money. Property owners in the county who are not taxed in the matter can be confidently expected to be building a school house in Ohio or Indiana.

The game between the Burlington and Bellevue teams last Saturday, on the local ground, was one among the many good games that have been witnessed there. It was so close as to make the final result very doubtful until Burlington turned the trick in the eighth inning that cinched the victory. Nothing was doing until the second inning when Burlington scored, nothing more being done along that line until the sixth inning, when Bellevue put two men across the plate and blanked Burlington in her half of the inning, which compliment Burlington returned in the seventh and then made three hits and two runs. In the eighth Bellevue made one and Burlington two runs, and it was all off. Sandford pitched a great game, having 9 strike-outs to his credit, while Snyder had only two but had something on his ball that made the batters hit grounders or pop flies, holding the heavy hitting victors down for four hits, while Burlington made nine. Ray, Conner, the fans idol, put up a sensational game at third. Following is the line up of each team: Burlington—Snyder, p; Snyder, 1b; Southern, 2b; Conner, 3b; Williamson, ss; White, rf; Smyke, lf; Kelly, cf. Bellevue—Lowmutter, p; Sandford, p; Clure, 1b; West, 2b; Brady, 3b; Berkshire, ss; Stucky, lf; Smith, cf; Presser, rf. Hits—Sandford, 3; Brady, 2; Conner, Kelly, Snyder.

White is there with his hits as usual. It was pretty much a pitcher's battle.

Rogers and Sullivan made good umpires.

Kelly has a new man but is making good for sure.

Before the game it was generally believed that Bellevue would win.

Earl Smith got a base on balls and then scored without the assistance of a hit.

Slack was the pitcher of the fine game and coached his pitcher carefully throughout the contest.

Souther is putting up a good game again. Second, while Williamson will take care of short.

Brady the veteran player is not all in by several years yet, if the way he pranced around third base is any indication.

Burlington had four errors and Bellevue two. Sandford gave one man his base on balls, and Snyder one. Sandford hit two batters.

The attendance was not large but will surely increase if the games the remainder of the season are as nicely conducted as they have been so far.

In regard to the action of the State Board of Equalization on its members, Mr. Mason of Adairville, made the following statement, upon the board's action:

"I think the board of Equalization has greatly abused its authority to say the least. I do not believe the Legislature ever intended to clothe it with the power of an assessing board except for the purpose of equalizing valuations. Comparatively no attention has been paid to such matters, but our inquiries have been almost wholly upon the question of omitted property, such as money, notes, bonds or property over which we have no jurisdiction. This was done for the evident purpose of putting it up on other classes of property, whether it is assessed properly or improperly. We adopted no regular system. We had the five-year average. The one-year average and the transfer sheets before us and we used neither and never had one line of the evidence transcribed for our use. The legislature refused to raise the rate 5 per cent, and we got them one better and put a much higher valuation in order to meet a deficit. Under this plan part of the public debt is paid by the great corporations or whiskey producers. I want the people of Kentucky to know that we are not such outrages. And I am saying so because the proceedings were held behind closed doors and my position might otherwise be misunderstood. No man can take the records before us and say that every county was dealt with justly and equitably. It is a fact that should have been our purpose, without regard to whether there was a surplus or deficit in the treasury."

All those interested in having the foot bridge replaced across the creek just south of Burlington are requested to meet there next Saturday at 1 p. m. W. J. Rice.

The Greatest CLOTHING SALE OF IT'S KIND Ever Given in Covington will begin Friday, May 20th.

We have purchased the entire surplus stock of Spring Clothing from Sandford, Varner & Co., MAKERS of CRITERION BRAND, located at 3rd and Race Streets, Cincinnati, Ohio. This firm is one of the largest wholesale houses in Cincinnati, making nothing but HIGH GRADE MEN'S and YOUNG MEN'S CLOTHING. The stock is larger than we could expect to move in one season, but not wanting to miss such an opportunity to buy this season's make at so great a reduction, and give my friends and patrons the benefit of this grand purchase; we bought this stock at 60c on the dollar at manufacturing cost. You may wonder why they sold such fine goods at such low prices. This is the why. They never carry any goods over from one season to the next, and knowing the kind of goods I handle, they sent for me, as they are anxious for their goods to have a fair representation. Now, in order to move this stock in as short a time as possible, I will sell it at the same price to you.

WHICH WILL BE LESS THAN THE COST OF MANUFACTURING.

Now to give you an idea how very cheap this stock is to be sold, I will quote you a few prices:

Suits that cost to manufacture $5.50 our sale price.....	$3.50	Suits that cost to manufacture $12.00 our sale price	$9.50
Suits that cost to manufacture $7.50 our sale price.....	$5.00	Suits that cost to manufacture $15.00 our sale price.....	$11.50
Suits that cost to manufacture $9.50 our sale price.....	$7.00	Suits that cost to manufacture $18.00 our sale price.....	$13.50

Now, to make this sale the Greatest Reduction Sale of the season, and make new friends, I have decided to make a BIG REDUCTION in every department of our Store. The line of CLOTHING, FURNISHING GOODS, HATS, MEN'S SHOES that we carry, needs no introduction in this part of the country, as there is none better to be had. This will be a great opportunity for you to get the best at less than one-third regular price. Pick the best early as they won't last long at prices quoted.

Singer Talks

1 Did you ever consider what the thousandth of an inch might mean in the adjustment of the needle-stroke on a sewing machine?

2 Or how many little invisible parts there are which may run well for a month or so in a carelessly-made machine, and then by going wrong render it utterly useless?

3 For the perfect construction and thorough testing of these vital details you must depend upon the honor and reputation of the maker.

4 The makers of the Singer Sewing Machine enjoy a reputation vouched for by millions of Singer users all over the world.

5 These millions of Singer users have proved the perfection of the Singer by years of steady sewing.

ELBERT ROY RILEY

November 14th, 1898, there was born to Mr. Eugene and Mrs. Emma Rogers Riley, a son whom they named, Elbert Roy. When this son was five years old, the mother died, and a few years later the father passed away, leaving three daughters and one son, all of tender age, to fight the battle of life alone. The God of the fatherless smiled on them, enabling them to grow up together in bonds of peculiar tender love until May 3, 1910, when He called Roy to Him self. After eleven weeks of great suffering at Christ's Hospital, where he underwent two severe operations for abdominal and pulmonary abscesses, he sweetly "fell on sleep." His many days and nights of agony were borne with wonderful courage, and his sisters and brother were enabled to be with him much of the time, doing everything that love and science could suggest to relieve him, but the end came and his body is resting beneath a flower-covered mound in Union cemetery, while his spirit is with God, who gave it. Roy was possessed of an unusually bright mind, a splendid physique and an attractive personality, which won for him a host of friends. The crowd assembled at his funeral was the largest ever seen in Union on any occasion. The discourse delivered by Rev. J. S. Wilson, of LaGrange, Ky., a former pastor of the Baptist church here was full of consolation to the stricken relatives, whose sorrow is not in rebellion to the will of God, but because as was said by one of them, "my heart is broken with disappointment."

During his illness Roy was unable to see his friends, but he was constantly receiving proofs of their loving interest in the form of cards and letters, and when at length he was able to receive his friends, his room was always fragrant with sweet flowers sent by these friends. These things gave him the keenest appreciation and he expressed his appreciation in the most grateful words. On the day of the funeral ten young men carried the exquisite floral offerings and acted as pall-bearers. Their grief attested their love for the gentle comrade who is gone. Besides the many warm friends, uncles, aunts and cousins, there remain three sisters, Mrs. James T. Bristol, Misses Marietta and Eugene Riley, and one brother, Mr. Harry Riley, to mourn the loss of this bright young life. Roy had recently taken a special course in the State College when attacked by his last illness he was studying book-keeping in Cincinnati, with the view of entering the business world. His talents seemed to eminently fit him for this, hence the feeling of disappointment that makes keen the grief of his family. A very wide circle of friends unite in deep sympathy to the sisters and brother, and commend them to Him whose love is around about them. Though just now a "frowning Providence" seems to surround them, some day we'll understand.

Messrs. Joe W. and H. O. Cleek, of Beaver neighborhood, came up to the county seat, last Thursday. They had about the same report in regard to the progress of the farm work in the lower part of the county that comes in from other localities. They reported tobacco plants plentiful in their immediate neighborhood.

ROUSE ENDORSED

By a Large Meeting of the Most Prominent Citizens and Leading Politicians of Covington.

A. B. Rouse, Boone's candidate for Congress returned home last Thursday from a tour of several days in the Congressional district, and was greatly pleased with his reception everywhere, and feels a sure winner. He attended, the night before, in Covington, a large meeting of the most prominent citizens and leading politicians of that city. It now seems that the nomination of Rouse is a foregone conclusion, which is certainly very encouraging to him, that being in the heart of the enemy's territory. It now seems that the nomination tends to stand by Mr. Rouse, while there is every appearance that he will make at least an even break in Covington, while Newport and Campbell county will not have it in for him so badly.

Hon. A. B. Rouse, of Burlington, Boone county, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress, was in town, Thursday and Friday, feeling the pulse of the voters. Mr. Rouse made a favorable impression on our citizens during his brief visit here and it is thought by many that his chances for the nomination at the primary election June 18th, are excellent. He is making a clean, dignified canvass and speaks confidently of securing the nomination, which is equivalent to an election, as a rule.—Warsaw Leader.

The remains of John Ailsasser, an old Confederate soldier, who died in the county infirmary some four years ago, and was interred in the cemetery on the premises were taken up last Wednesday and transferred to a cemetery at Newport. Ailsasser was a comrade of the late William C. Reppas in the Confederate army, and it was in obedience to a request of his that the remains of his old companion in war were transferred to another resting place. The work was assigned to the sons of the deceased, and they complied with the request of their father at the earliest day possible.

But Dr. King's New Life Pills expel poisons from the system; bring hope and courage; cure all Liver, Stomach and Kidney troubles; impart health and vigor to the weak, nervous and ill; as at Bentler's drug store, Erlanger.

Clifford Hedges went to the city one day last week, and brought home with him a very fine mare which he says has proven as good as she is handsome. He considers her the best he has ever owned.

Candidate For Congress Says Williamstown Suit

Was Brought Simply as a Political Dodge, Designed to Injure Him in Present Campaign.

The filing of the suit against me by Mrs. Phoebe K. Collins, of Williamstown, Ky., is a political dodge pure and simple, and intended to injure me in my campaign for Democratic nomination for Congress," said Representative D. Lynn Gooch last night. "I never heard of Mrs. Collins in my life until this suit was filed, and while I was connected with the company no stock was issued to any such person to my knowledge. Any such stock was issued to me as individual stock and Treasury stock."

"Before I severed my connection with the company I did not purchase all of the stock of the original stockholders at 100 cents on every dollar invested by them. Instead of accepting my suit my associates bought me out on the basis that I offered them. Mr. Glascock and Mr. Childress bought my stock on the terms mentioned at less than sixty cents per share. Chipman, now a director of the company, bought from me nine shares of stock, which I still held at an advance on the price paid by the other two gentlemen. I never sold any other stock in this company to anyone."

"The agent referred to in the petition John Long, now a Vice-President of the company, was not officially connected with the company while I was its President, and no act of his can be laid at my door. Whatever stock he sold I know nothing about. Why shouldn't the suit have been brought against Long, who sold the stock?"

"The statement that secretary Wood knew nothing about the true condition of affairs in the company is absurd. Wood is the man who opened up the books of the company originally, and he has been with it ever since. He is now Secretary and Treasurer of the company, and in view of the fact that I retired from the company last October it is not possible as it must to every sensible business man, that Mr. Woods has had ample opportunity to inform himself as to the condition of the business. As a matter of fact Mr. Wood has always known the condition of the company."

"I do not know what stock Long sold to Mrs. Collins. It was not my stock and it was not Treasury stock. The company never paid Mr. Long a commission while I was President, and I am convinced that whatever commission he got came from some individual for the sale of individual stock. Mr. Long knows this to be true, and I am prepared to make affidavit to the facts."

"This whole thing is a political trick which will react on the heads of those who concocted it. I have absolutely no responsibility in the matter, and even the parties in the suit, I think, know that they are barking up the wrong tree. Here's the proof:

"I received summons in Covington to answer this suit. As everybody knows, service cannot be made from the county in which a suit is brought into another, or remote counties. Suit must either be brought in the county in which the defendant lives or else service must be had on him in the county in which the suit is filed. With this in mind and because I am determined to defend myself in this case I went to Williamstown in Grant county. I arrived there at 8 o'clock in the morning and remained until after 4 in the afternoon, during which time I continuously solicited court officials and representatives of the plaintiff to give me legal service in the matter of this suit. Notwithstanding my presence and pleading they declined to take the action. Before this thing is over I expect to make somebody smart."

In the last fifty years education required by boys and girls has changed. Not that education is not as important, but the methods are different and the end is specializing. Each person must learn to do something that the other cannot. A good common school course and a four years high school course fits one to learn to do things. The value of education today is greater than ever before, because of the tendency to specialize and each person to perform one thing. Concentrated on one efficient along that line. Life is too short to try to learn all about everything, much can be learned about one thing. A life time study on one thing makes the opinion of the one who does this more valuable to the world, and a greater salary or reward. The work is also easier done by those who have a complete knowledge and are skilled in their profession or chosen work in life. Learn to do something better than anyone and you will succeed."

A Regular Tom Boy was Sussie-climbing trees and fences, jumping ditches, whittling, always getting scratches, sprains, cuts, bruises, bumps, burns or scalds. But I saw her mother just applied Bucken's Arnica Salve and cured her quick. Heals everything healable—Boils, Ulcers, Eczema, Old Sores, Corns or Piles. Try it. It's at Bentler's drug store, Branson.

Reports from various places especially in Central Kentucky, indicate that the program is being made in pooling the tobacco crop of 1916. Those who have pooled in the past absolutely refuse to be made tools of by the dampers, and it now looks as if the pooling campaign for 1916 will be a failure. At present there are no indications of an early sale of the pooled crop and it is necessary to hold it over on top of what now promises to be a big crop this year, the prospect is not a flattering one. Pooling is a great thing but it cannot wholly set aside the law of supply and demand.—Winchester Democrat.

The U. S. Supreme Court has affirmed the rights of the States to adopt and enforce measures to prevent combinations in restraint of trade. The decrees which the highest court in the land sustains are those of the supreme courts of Mississippi and Tennessee, dissolving the lumber trust and putting the Standard Oil Trust respectively. The trusts have many times defied State legislatures to pass restrictive legislation on the ground that interference in their business would conflict with the interstate commerce laws. By the decision of the United States Supreme Court this refuge is no longer left them. The decision is an important one and in conformity with the trend of public demand.

A preacher said: "You editors dare not tell the truth, your newspapers would fail." The editor replied: "You are right; and the minister who will at all times tell the truth about his members, living or dead, will not occupy the pulpit more than one Sunday, and he will find it necessary to leave town in a hurry. The press and the pulpit go hand in hand with white washing and kind words. Magnifying high virtue into large ones, the pulpit, press and graves stone are the great saint-making triumvirate. The great minister went away looking very thoughtful, while the editor turned to his work, telling about the surprising beauty of the bride, when in fact she was as ugly as mud."

Because of the report of the crop condition in this State for the month of March showed a decided falling off in the acreage of the crop of wheat Commissioner of Agriculture, Rankin, has decided to begin a campaign to induce the farmers of Kentucky to grow more wheat and less tobacco. He has a double purpose in this campaign, which will be one of education. He will try to get the farmers to go back to the old system of taking their wheat to the mill and having it ground for their own use, take their shorts and mill feed home to their stock and sell what they have left, and not till they have supplied their own wants. During the next year Commissioner Rankin is going to try to get every farmer in Kentucky to raise some wheat on his farm.

John C. C. Mayo, of Paintsville, the miller and coal baron of Eastern Kentucky, who is urging the nomination of James B. McCreary for the governorship, says: "I want to be the Democratic reformer in Kentucky and I'm confident that they will do it if James B. McCreary is their standard bearer. As I expect to be at the next general election for State of ficers, McCreary is the only man in the State who can unite the party, and defeat O'Rear, who I feel certain will be the Republican nominee. In saying this I believe I reflect the opinion of a large majority of the people of Kentucky."

"I am intimately acquainted with the wishes of the Democrats of Eastern Kentucky, and they are for McCreary. I never hear any one else mentioned as having a possible chance against O'Rear. McCreary can harmonize all factions in this State, and he will bring back to the party many of the men who left the ranks because of the gold and silver issue and who have since been voting with the Republicans or the Independents. We want a business administration in this State, and McCreary is the man who can give it to us. He demonstrated that when he filled the office before, and he has since shown his ability in that direction by the successful management of his own affairs."

Finding their way home, a distance of seven blocks, and thru a business portion of the town, would be nothing remarkable in pigeons, or even a dog or cat, but in fowls seems worthy of notice, says a correspondent in "Our Dumb Animals."

We sold six Buff Orpington hens to a man who carried them away in a bag. Next morning 4 of them were back to breakfast. There was no doubt these were the hens sold, for aside from the number there was the indisputable proof of the leg-band on each fowl. On the way home Mr. E. stopped at the home of the purchaser, who said four of his hens were missing from the park. At noon the carrier was carrying the hens away in a bag as before. About 4 o'clock that day I was up stairs when changing to look from a front porch I saw one of the hens turn the street corner a block away. Past the other houses in the block she came, turning in at our door, and without hesitation and squawking joyous "ca-dack! ca-dack!" which certainly were chicken talk for "got back! got back!"

Investigation developed that those fowls had returned without human assistance, one of them a second time, the way having been cleared by making two turns, following electric track, crossing railroad track, passing factories, depot, etc., which would seem to prove superior intelligence for the Buff Orpingtons, or the best development of the homing instinct.

There is too little attention paid to apple growing in Kentucky. There are orchards in plenty but their owners in most instances devote very little attention to them. The general disposition is to look upon fruit growing as a minor consideration. Its possibilities as a source of income are well illustrated in the case of that Carlisle county grower, who last year gathered the fifth crop from his "nine year old orchard" which is a veritable gold mine and is not on the market at any price. Orchards properly attended are highly remunerative. Good apples are always salable at good prices. No state in the union produces apples superior in quality to those grown in Kentucky. There are neglected orchards all over Kentucky which should be brought in handsome returns to their owners and would be highly profitable if properly handled. Apple growing is not a burdensome or laborious job like that of raising corn and tobacco and there are hundreds of farmers who might make an easier living by devoting more care to their orchards and by putting out larger orchards and small crops of corn and tobacco.—Ex.

The twentieth of May will find less tobacco set in this county than on the same date in a number of years, with the exception of 1908, when no crop was grown here. It is doubtful if more than a hundred acres have been put out thus far. Last year at this time probably two-thirds of the crop had been planted.

There has been a considerable scare about the scarcity of plants, but it is always the "other fellows" plants that are scarce, and it is quite probable that there will be an abundance of plants to set all the ground that will be prepared for tobacco in the county by the second week in June.

While this date is a little late, there are lots of people who believe a crop planted at that time will produce better results than one planted early in May. Last year a great deal of tobacco was set by the 10th of May, yet it which was set two weeks later showed better results than that planted so early.

While it seems that there will be plenty of plants for a late setting, the chances are that cut worms will do more to curtail the growing crop than the cold. Tobacco growers report that these worms are terribly numerous, and that in many instances they are destroying the plants in the beds. They are working on young corn and are wreaking untold damages. Another trouble that is liable to overtake the growers this year is the season. It is much harder to get a stand of plants at a late setting than at an early one, as the weather is usually so much warmer, therefore the prospects for a good tobacco crop this year are not flattering.—Grant County News.

As nearly all the apples, peaches, plums, pears, and cherries have been killed, it might be advisable to plant a large patch of watermelons and cantaloupes. They should be a good substitute for the fruits named, and what were not consumed at home could be sold at a profit. There is an increased demand for them by reason of a general failure of the fruit.—Georgetown Times.

THE COMET

Is it Responsible for The Peculiar Weather Which has Prevailed This Spring.

H. F. Hillemeier, of Lexington, the widely known nurseryman, and who is also the accepted weather authority for Central Kentucky, discusses thru an interesting and lengthy article in a local paper the much mooted question of whether Halley's comet is in any sense responsible for the peculiar and varied weather which has prevailed this spring.

While Mr. Hillemeier does not commit himself to the conviction that great comets have influenced the weather in the years they have appeared, he recites that the notable comets which have visited during the present life time were in 1835, 1882 and 1910, and says:

"The early spring of 1882 was made so odd and peculiar, then then throbbed with joy because every tree in a father's orchard was covered in the white, red and blue of the present year, the fullest fruit and every bush and plant in a mother's garden was a glorious thing of beauty and joy to day even. Then came the coldest rains, the rawest winds and the meanest weather ever. There was no frost. The flowers which had been dropped, corn rotted, oats yellowed and nothing flourished. The torrid heat of one day was followed by a cyclone and need of top coats the next. There were more reapers in those days and cradles and scythes made poor headway in the tangled mass of grain and grass; nor was the saving of either great. An August cyclone, or a succession of them, leveled the corn as neatly as a loaded roller. It is the only year remembered that corn failed to ripen in Kentucky; and that the crop was lost by rot. The price of seed corn and all round stock was higher in the spring of 1889 than at any time since.

"In 1883 March was rather wet, but April was absolutely perfect. Light light showers fell, so that plows, harrows, seeders and sowers never lost an hour and the crops were a saving of either great. An August cyclone, or a succession of them, leveled the corn as neatly as a loaded roller. It is the only year remembered that corn failed to ripen in Kentucky; and that the crop was lost by rot. The price of seed corn and all round stock was higher in the spring of 1889 than at any time since.

"How fine the spring of 1911 for five or six weeks no being shower hurried home the plowman or the sower of the seeds. The winter had been perfect in the deepest of the winter, the fullest of the winter, the trees of fruit and of flower, the bushes of bloom and of berry, the arching branches and the fullness of the leaves, the fullness of the leaves. There is many a slip between cup and lip, and Sunday April 21 saw the most complete destruction of fruit and tender things, but the marring of the finest promise ever. The weather of that year has been practically that of 1883 and 1889, and this is the year of another comet."

"Those who believe that comet bode war, famine, pestilence and all manner of evil. This belief, runs back so far that no one can say when or where it originated or on what fact it is based. Solomon said there is nothing new under the sun, and this belief about comets, then perhaps held, because of some accidental coincidence, is now equally a source of dread to the illiterate and a matter of speculation and investigation to the wisest and most profound.

"Those who balance on the question of the influence of comets on terrestrial conditions are in the company, not of the ignorant and superstitious, but of the best thought of the civilized ages and of the nations, and of the earnest effort of the perfect equipment of investigators of today. From these we may learn something of the philosophy of Solomon, and stand acquitted of the charge of superstition and ignorance."

Tuesday, June 14th will be the 26th anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of the United States, and Governor Willson has designated that day as Flag Day in a proclamation calling upon the people of Kentucky to observe it as such by the displaying of the stars and stripes on every school house, public and private building, in the commonwealth. The people should respond to this appeal with an error most heartily in showing their respect for the national emblem of the greatest country on earth. Get your flag ready and show your patriotism by a liberal display of Old Glory on Tuesday, June 14th.

Secretary of State Bruner says there are several banks in the State which he intends to have investigated because of discrepancies in their statements from time to time that are not explained on the face of the statements, and which must be explained before the State endorses them as all right.

Advices from the West Tennessee fruit belt are to the effect that the strawberry crop just marketed was a record breaker, both in quantity and prices realized.

Final figures for the assessment of 118 counties in the State have been announced by the board of equalization. The figures show that the increase in the assessment as compared with last year, amounted to $75,000,000, of which about $60,000,000 was put on by the State board of equalization and $15,000,000 by the county assessors. The total assessment before equalization was $787,016,385 which was increased by the State board to $862,275,023.

A HOT TIME

Is What the Republicans Are Having Up in the Eleventh Congressional District.

A warm fight is in progress in the Eleventh District between D. C. Edwards, present incumbent, and Caleb Powers for the Republican nomination for Congress. The Edwards newspapers are publishing statements in support of a claim that Powers left prison a rich man and that he resorted to deception in an affidavit to Governor Willson to the effect that he had no money. A fifth trial. A letter is printed from James H. Moore, of Jackson county, who, during the greater portion of the time that Powers was in prison, traveled in nearly every state in the union soliciting contributions for Powers' defense. He says that Caleb Powers is pleading poverty to the people in his campaign for Congress. Having traveled in his behalf, and being familiar with the circumstances under which enormous sums of money were raised for him, I am not surprised that he continues to deceive the public, but I am surprised at his calling attention to his affidavit filed with the Governor.

In this affidavit he swears that he came out of prison $5,000 in debt, with no money or property to pay it, yet, in 1893, and after the expense of his third trial had been paid, he had money out on interest.

His case was pending in Federal Court, and for two or three years vigorous persistent business effort was made in most every state of the Union to collect money to meet expenses of the court.

It may not be generally known that the committee at Louisville besides paying the expenses of Caleb Powers' trials, gave him money also, and that no portion of the tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars contributed to his defense, or through his many collectors, ever went to the committee having charge of his defense fund.

Indeed, a personal representative and solicitor had instructions from him to send all money direct to him and not to the committee at Louisville, which had charge of his defense fund, and raised the money and paid the expenses of his trials.

We were instructed also by him to not send any money to the committee at Louisville, which had charge of his defense fund, and raised the money and paid the expenses of his trials.

"We were instructed also by him to not send any money to the committee at Louisville, which had charge of his defense fund, and raised the money and paid the expenses of his trials.

It became necessary to keep the folks at home impressed with Caleb's poverty, as no county in the mountains ever failed to come across every time an excuse could be found to call upon them, and when his kinspeople went out to collect for him they had to be dressed up out of the funds contributed by the people for Caleb's defense."

(Atchinson Kan. Globe.)
We don't believe the men look for second wives as industriously as they are used to.

In trying to get the best of it every man is apt to be careless of the rights of others.

Most of the men looking for work cannot do it in a satisfactory manner after they find it.

Every man who gets up picnic thinks that really he should be known as the main maker.

Women think one of the best things that can be said about a man is he isn't hard to cook for.

A woman who is stocky doesn't wrinkle is said to be a good housekeeper, but then how can you tell?

By the time a woman remembers the size of her glove, shoe, shirt waist, collar, corset, hose and belt, she wears the basket of provisions left to be buried with further statistics.

State Senator Claude M. Thomas announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Seventh district. In his announcement he quoted a letter he had received from a representative Cantrell, his opponent, in 1905, in which Cantrell promised his support. The contest is certain to be a warm one. Developments have brought many leaders of the Burley Tobacco Society into notice as being opposed to Cantrell on account of his single opposition to the Burley pool for 1910.

The local comet enthusiasts were disappointed at the view that the comet they obtained when it appeared in the west. It was so dim that it was hard to locate.

A TRIP TO BELLEVUE.

Many Improvements in That Little Town Have Been Made in the Last Few Years.

A Bank, New Graded School Building and Canning Factory Are Among the Improvements.

SOME GOOD OLD PEOPLE MET.

A visit to Bellevue is all that is necessary to convince a person that the spirit of enterprise has a firm hold on the inhabitants and that it is making good its numerous claims. The residences generally are well kept and make a most attractive appearance, many of them having just come from under the care of the painter. In the last few years several handsome and commodious residences have been erected in the town, which has had a general repairing, enlarging and beautifying among the older homes, and as a result the town presents quite an attractive appearance.

The new school house, a two story brick, is a structure of which the town may well be proud, and will prove a joy for ever and, no doubt, it will take rank as one of the leading educational institutions in the county, as those who are responsible for its existence are men who bring to the front any undertaking they are behind. The handling of pooled tobacco has benefited the town considerably, and preparations are under way to increase the warehouse capacity in order to take care of the tobacco of a very much larger territory than heretofore. The handling of the pooled tobacco has been so eminently satisfactory that the county board of control is glad to have more of it handled there than has been done in the past, and has encouraged the increase of warehouse capacity.

A bank, cannery and several tobacco warehouses are among the recent business additions to the town.

While in the town last Friday evening it was a pleasure to the writer to meet several old people, among them Uncle Sam Wingate, who is in the nineties. While not so strong in body Mr. Wingate's mind is clear and he enjoys a splendid recollection, and can give an accurate history of the town back to a time when there was but a single house on the present site. He can give a perfect chain of the transfers of the land on which the town is located and that which surrounds it, and in many instances he remembers the price it brought, much of it selling as low as $15 an acre, which now can not be bought for $100 per acre. Mr. Wingate has witnessed the transition of the Bellevue country from a dense forest of fine timber, very sparsely inhabited, to a thickly settled community where among the best farms in the county are located. When his memory reverts to his early days, no doubt it seems to him that he has been transferred to another world, so different are his present surroundings from those at the time when the bustling little town of which he is the oldest inhabitant was not. Mr. Wingate has all his life been one of the county's best citizens, and all join in the wish that he may enjoy life for many more years to come.

Old time friends met were Mrs. Elizabeth Neal and Mrs. Cynthia Kelly, sisters, who are very comfortably situated, and are always delighted to meet one of their acquaintances of olden times.

If you visit Bellevue and do not see W. W. Walton you miss getting your optics on one of the old land marks, a quiet, always doing-something citizen, a disciple of the late Gen. J. Henry Clegg, Caddis Mauer, Dony Cook and Ben Corbin, who are to be met if you want to enjoy your visit. Mr. Walton and Mike Corbin will appreciate a grip of your hand, while many other citizens, who were missed last Friday, will extend a hearty welcome if you chance to come upon them.

W. E. Vest, a Walton real estate agent, sold to J. J. Walton at $88 per acre the 300 acre farm in Bellevue neighborhood belonging to the heirs of the late John J. Botta. This land joins Mr. Walton's other large tract and will make his one of the largest farms in that part of the county, and a very fine place on which to raise livestock of any kind.

Gathered from Our Neighboring Exchange From Across the River.

Lewis Terrill had about $50 worth of meat stolen from his smoke house one night recently at his home across the river. On Wednesday evening, May 14, the Lawrenceburg Public Library was formally opened with a reception and book shower. Miss Junker expects to launch his new gasoline boat the last of this week or the first of next. The boat, as he calls his launch, is 10 feet long, 4 feet 10 inches wide, draws 1-1/2 feet of water and is driven by a 2-horse power engine. The keel and ribs are of oak and sides of cypress. This boat will be one of the neatest and prettiest pleasure craft on the Ohio river. Lawrenceburg Register.

In many localities in Dearborn and adjoining counties there is a scarcity of tobacco plants owing to the devastation wrought by a pest, which destroys the tender plants.

Farmers this year have noticed that the earth is literally alive with cut worms and many delayed planting their corn on this account. Professor A. J. Bigney of the department of biology and geology of Moore's Hill college when asked for information concerning this pest took the matter up with Professor J. H. Troop, state entomologist, who says: "I do not think the cut worms will do any particular harm from this time on. Their season of growth has about expired. It is understood that the worms should begin to change to the pupa state very by now. They have not already done so. On a large scale, late plowing is the most practical remedy which can be used against their ravages. This turns under a good deal of green material for them to feed upon during the last few days of their growth."

Base ball fans wonder how it is that the Cincinnati team makes such a good showing with a staff of twirlers who persist in handicapping the team to the opponents on the base on balls route.

NOT FAR OFF

Is the Time When Florence, Union and Big Bone Neighborhoods

Will be Brought to the Front By The Traction Road.

KEEP A LOOK OUT FOR THE CARS.

As time passes the more it looks like the Covington and Big Bone Traction road will be a go. Last Thursday night the company filed with Covington city council bond for $15,000 to have the road in operation in three years and another bond for $10,000 to comply with the provisions of the ordinance by which it was granted the right of way over certain streets. The men who are and have been pushing the enterprise have never been discouraged since they began work to secure the road. The opinions of the numerous doubting Thomases have cut no ice with the promoters of the enterprise who have been ceaseless in their advocacy of the road and efforts to convince the land owners over whose possession the right of way is desired, that the road would be of great value to them in numerous ways, and be it said that they have succeeded in securing the right of way nearly the entire distance the road will cover. Florence, Union and Big Bone neighborhoods will be brought to the front by the road in ways that are too numerous to attempt to enumerate, and a traction road is exactly what these communities need and to which they are entitled by reason of their wealth and enterprise.

Marvelous Discoveries
mark the wonderful progress of the age. Air flights on heavy machines, telegrams without wires, terrible war inventions to kill men, and that wonder of wonders Dr. King's New Life Pills to save life when threatened by coughs, colds, laryngitis, asthma, croup, bronchitis, hemorrhages, hay fever and whooping cough, or lung trouble. All these afflictions it has no equal. It relieves instantly. Its sure cure. James M. Black of Asheville, N. C. R. B. No. 4, writes to him of an obstinate cough after all other remedies failed. The general rush for settlement on the public domain of the United States is indicated by the enormous increase in the number of entries made in the current settlement year. By the end of the year Commissioner Dennett of the Land office says the increase, as compared with the entries of the previous twelve months, probably would reach 60,000. About 90 per cent of these entries, he added, were made for homestead settlement. The total number of entries of all kinds last year amounted to some 1,100,000, while the current year it is calculated they will reach more than 2,200,000.

Persons owning lots in the Odd-Fellows cemetery at Burlington, and who have not had same cleared this year are requested to do so at once, or send to F. A. Rouse at Burlington, the sum of twenty-five cents for which amount he will have the lot belonging to the party sending that amount, cleaned twice this year.

Cherries are ripe and plentiful notwithstanding the extreme cold weather last winter. In a few more weeks we hope to say the same about apples and peaches. We like our Apple brandy, our strawberries, June cherries and July apples and peaches, but Oh, you August watermelon!—Milton News.

O. P. Phipps, of Burlington, and M. J. Corbin, of Bellevue, each bought an auto, last week. Mr. Phipps will use his carrying the mail from Burlington to Erlanger, extending his trip from the latter place to the car line. His machine will carry seven passengers and will be in use in the next few days.

Harry Loe, of Riverside, was a caller at the Recorder's office, last Friday. He was returning from John Bachelor's place in Grove neighborhood, with a load of hogs. As one of his wagons was empty it is presumed that he took two wagon loads of money down to exchange for one load of swine.

In printing the bills for the sale of the personal estate of the late Rev. J. W. Rogers, of Walton, the name of J. D. Doubman as auctioneer, was omitted. Mr. Doubman is a very popular auctioneer and gets all the work in Walton and surrounding country.

Gunpowder Baptist church held a big meeting last Thursday, when John Ryle was ordained deacon. A very fine dinner was served at the noon hour.

Teachers who apply for rural schools must have their applications in the hands of the Secretaries of the Division Boards not later than the last Saturday in June. On that day the teachers will be employed.

Petersburg has voted to issue bonds in order to build a new school house. The school interests of this county seem to be very different from the situation a few years ago.

Great care should be careful in the selection of teachers for the coming year. The salary of the teacher is much better than it once was. Get the best you can find. We hope to publish the schedule of salaries week after next.

The money for teachers' salaries for the last month has arrived, and checks are being sent out.

TIME DRAWING NEAR

When the County Fair Will Be in Progress.

Prepare Something For The Show And Help Encourage The Enterprise.

The county fair season is not very far away. It is time to think about preparing something for the annual show, at any rate. Get the animals in the best condition possible, perhaps. If they would prize the prize they would prize the prize. Encourage the boys to try for the prize on corn or potatoes; it would be a great thing for them. In the list of prize winners at the fair, it might be the making of that; that is it might make far more of them, and that would be a great help towards their prosperity and happiness in life. And let the girls take part in the contest. Let them show their names or something in the ornamental line, or in poultry or flowers.

Every enterprising, public spirited citizen, and a family should do their part towards supporting the fair, and making it more interesting and useful to the people of the county. It is a matter of both pride and profit to do this. You like to hear our county and neighborhood spoken well of by visitors, and to show superior products of the farm leads to the belief that your land and other conditions are superior, and prize winning stock, grains, etc., easily command advanced prices. At all events encourage and patronize the county fair.

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman is nervous and irritable. Constipation, and kidney troubles show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood, give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth velvety skin, lovely complexion, and good health. Try them. 50c at Bentler's drug store, Erlanger.

AL NONSENSE

Majority of Fruit and Grain Was Never in Better Condition.

(From Aurora, (Ind.) Bulletin.)
Those who have been harping on the devastation of the Frost King, the good housewives who have been mourning the seemingly apparent fact that their preserves and fruit shelves, and jelly jars would be as bare and empty as the proverbial Mother Hubbard's cupboard; and the pessimists who have been fearing the empty state of the granaries for the coming year, had best cease their wailing and take a broad walk about Adams county. The north part, and but cannot be the same everywhere, comes the report of excellent prospects of a good fruit and grain crop in spite of the snow and frost—which are blamed upon the comet. The cherry crop which has been a failure for several years, is said to be good this year and early cherries are already turning yellow with the first stage of ripeness. The plum crop is believed to be decidedly good, the plums being already a quarter grown. The apple crop gives promise of being a fair one, but cannot be the same everywhere this year. The wheat is excellent and the oats said to have never been better. Corn is in various stages of development. In some places farmers are plowing the corn which has long since been up, while other farmers are just now in the process of planting. The corn which has dared peep above the ground thus early is said to be somewhat yellow from the continued cold, but it is thought the coming of the June skies will soon restore it.

BASE BALL.

Burlington 12-Bellevue 1.
The Burlington base-ball team went to Bellevue last Saturday afternoon and played rings around the team at that place. Snyder was in the box for the Burlington team, while the Bellevue team was in the box for the Burlington team. The game was a very close one, but the Burlington team won by a score of 12 to 1. The game was played at the Burlington grounds, and the Burlington team was very much pleased with their victory. The Bellevue team was very much disappointed in their defeat. The game was a very interesting one, and the Burlington team was very much pleased with their victory. The Bellevue team was very much disappointed in their defeat. The game was a very interesting one, and the Burlington team was very much pleased with their victory. The Bellevue team was very much disappointed in their defeat.

Being short one player Andy Conner had to play base for Burlington, and put up an excellent game. Elbert Clure was sent to second where he appeared to be doing very well. Williams was put up a great game both at short and at the bat, while Conner was a terror with his stick.

It seemed that the Bellevue players never recovered from the cyclone the Burlington crowd started in the first inning, and they permitted the Burlington team to get up the merry-go-round while they chased flies and grass cutters. Bellevue will do better next Saturday. Mark the prediction.

Hebron defeated Burlington High School team on the Hebron grounds last Saturday afternoon 12 to 5. The feature of the game was the throwing to first base of Courtney Kelly.

The Boones have played five games this season, winning all of them. In the five games the Boones have made 78 hits and 58 runs, while their opponents have made 37 hits and 19 runs. The Boones and the Bellevue team will meet again next Saturday afternoon on the grounds at Burlington. The Bellevue boys will come determined to win. Come out and see the game.

TOBACCO CROP REPORT.

Weather So Unseasonable That Plants Are Retarded.

Farmers Have Been Able to Plow Every Day Recently, However, and Ground Will All Soon Be in Condition.

(By E. T. Roberts.)
Lexington, Ky., June 4, 1910.

The past week has been sufficiently free of rain to enable the farmers to plow every day, but the fact that a great deal of corn was still unplanted and tobacco land to prepare, most farmers have turned their attention in that direction and have been plowing for many weeks without plants sufficiently large to do a general planting; still, some have started their seeders, and have put out a few early plants.

The weather has been phenomenally cool Friday morning the weather bureau recorded the lowest at 54. A few minutes below frost line, and 22 degrees below the normal temperature for the season. During the entire week, the minimum temperature averaged less than 50, hence too cold to enable the plants and the crops to make any material progress. One thing it has done, however, has held back the normal growth of plants, thus giving the farmer time to cultivate and prepare his ground.

Last week found them at least a week behind with their plowing, owing to the continued rain. The weather, however, will put them in good shape, and most farmers have their work up in good shape, and next week, if we can get some warmer weather, we look to see a most active week of planting. The plants that have been set never wilted, but have started right off growing, and those in the field are making good strong root, so we believe on the whole, if we can get some warmer weather from now on, nothing will be lost by the past week of cool weather.

It looks now as if there was less than half the crop set out, and the ground is still bare. One week later than we expected in our last week's forecast, but beyond doubt next week will see a great deal of planting. Of course, no matter how seasonable, and how favorable conditions may come, some farmers are never up to their eyes in the work, and are at a loss to get their work behind them. Some are well on their way to the finish, but this is an exceptional case.

Some are prone to lay the blame of these cold days to Halley's comet; others think the weather man and ice men are at it together because the price of ice has advanced. If its the comet, one consolation is, few of us will ever see it again! If it is the weather man and ice men, we are for the ice man, once it that alone will bring us some good weather. The weather is growing weather, mingled with a few refreshing showers, now and then as needed. Several planters have sold their 1910 crop, because to this market at 10 and 11 cents, so this doesn't look very bad.

WAR CLAIMS

Effecting Interest of Drafted Men in Kentucky Favorably Referred.

The following from the Pendleton applies to Kentucky counties generally:

There are a number of hopeful claimants in Pendleton county to drafted Civil War claims against the Government, who will be interested in the good news which comes from Washington to the effect that Senator Bradley secured favorable reference to the Court of Claims by the Senate Friday of bills carrying $600,000 for Kentucky Civil War soldiers and their estates.

"These bills have been refused adjudication by the Court of Claims for years because of technical defects which put them out of that court's jurisdiction. Early this year, however, they were corrected their phrasing and completed their requests today. He had them favorably reported to the court, where they will be adjudicated."

"The bills carry relief to members of Civil War drafts in Kentucky for their estates. There are about 2,000 men and estates, with an average of $300.00 cash. They were pressed into the Union service after the State had yielded more than her quota, and their claims have been pending for years until now."

As Henry Clure and James Rogers, of Bellevue, were coming to court last Monday morning, they met Robt. Rice on the hill near the court house. They were talking with M. J. Corbin's auto, and the horse attached to the buggy became frightened, and before they could get it in getting by the machine one of the buggy shafts was broken.

Show Your County Pride.

The Democrats of Boone county should bear in mind that on Saturday the 18th inst. the primary election to select a Democratic candidate for Congress in this, the Sixth District of Kentucky, will be held, and another very important thing for them to remember in connection with the primary election is that Boone county has a young man who has a laudable ambition to be the district's next congressman, and in order to succeed in that ambition he has asked all his time to becoming acquainted with the Democrats in the other counties of the district, relying on the loyalty of his people at home to give him an overwhelming majority in Boone. In the matter of fidelity to his party, and qualification to hold the office to which he aspires, there is no question, and the Democrats of Boone county should take a pride in rallying to the support of A. B. Rouse in his candidacy. His prospects for success at the primary election are exceedingly bright, and his county can and will contribute materially to that success. Not having made a thorough canvass of the county, should not detract from the loyalty of his people at home, but on the other hand they should be enthused by the effort he is making among strangers. In the spirit of comparison, has Mr. Rouse's opponent an advantage, which is another good reason why Boone county Democrats should rally to his support and show their appreciation of the honor of having one of their number represent the district in Congress.

AN OPPORTUNITY

For The Voters of Boone County To Send One of Her Boys To Congress.

To the Voters of Boone County:—Day of 18th inst. will hold the Democratic of the Sixth Congressional District of Kentucky will have an opportunity to nominate a young man of their own county to represent them in Congress. The name should appeal to the local pride of the voters of Arthur Rouse's county and impel them to march to the polls in solid phalanx, and cast their votes for this splendid young man.

View the situation from whatever angle you wish, and the candidates by all the requisite standards of fitness, and Mr. Rouse will merit your support on every point. The country needs a young man of his caliber, coupled with ability and directed by right thinking and honesty of purpose. Arthur fills the bill.

Remember, the 18th and wish him success, but go to the polls and cast your vote for him, for the VOTE is the thing that counts, and in Boone County, it will not count unless cast.

Many a man has been defeated by over-confidence of his friends; therefore, do not make the mistake in this instance, of thinking Arthur does not need your support, but get out and vote for him, and see that your neighbor votes the same way. Give Arthur Rouse a rousing majority in old Boone, and show the people of other counties that you are proud of your county, and proud of this magnificent young man, who was born and raised in Boone, and who is now a young man of his caliber, coupled with ability and directed by right thinking and honesty of purpose. Arthur fills the bill.

Bids may be submitted for any number of said bonds. The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids. All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the undersigned for 10 per cent of the amount of the bid, which will be credited on the account of the bid if the bid is accepted, or forfeited if the bid is not accepted. The check will be returned.

Meadows are full of weeds and the grass is thin and indicates a short growth.

Not much is expected of the potatoes unless the ground is thoroughly wet in the next few days.

R. L. Huey, of Big Bone church neighborhood, one of the largest tobacco growers in the county has only eight of his intended crop of forty acres planted. He will begin hauling water and make a season unless there is a good rain in the next few days.

For Sale—Tobacco plants enough to set five acres of ground. Apply to Chas. Stephens, Bullittsville, Ky.

NOTICE—The Richmond School Society will give an entertainment in the yard of Rev. William Miller, near Richmond church, on Saturday night, June 11th, at 15 minutes to eight o'clock. Admission 10 cents.

Nothing has transpired in this locality for a long time so interesting as the Goodridge reunion, which was held at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Conner, last Sunday. A large crowd of friends and relatives were present, all bringing well filled baskets. At the noon hour the table was spread on the lawn, where a bountiful dinner was spread, consisting of many good things to eat, besides all the ice cream, cake and lemonade they desired, and then some. One of the features of the day was the excellent music furnished by Harry Dinn and Hubert Conner on their graphophone. Many beautiful selections were rendered, which the crowd enjoyed very much. Raymond Goodridge with his kodak took several pictures of the crowd. After a 5 o'clock lunch all departed, hoping to meet next year at Smith Goodridge's, at Taylorsport. The day will be long remembered, as Mr. and Mrs. Conner are good entertainers, never leaving anything undone that will add to the pleasure and enjoyment of their guests.

SITE SELECTED.

At a meeting of the John Morgan Monument Committee of the Kentucky Daughters of the Confederacy, the location of the equestrian statue of Gen. John H. Morgan was decided on and the sculptor, Pompeo Coppini, was instructed to proceed at once to cast the statue and arrange for erecting it on the spot selected in Lexington.

After carefully considering the two sites offered for the monument, it was decided to select the one in front of the courthouse instead of the location in front of the Carnegie Public Library. One reason for this decision was the fact that Morgan's men at their annual reunion at Parke's Hill last August, recommended that the courthouse site be chosen.

The Tobacco Situation.

The tobacco situation is just this: If, in the next few weeks, the indications for a small acreage are as pronounced as at present the Burley Tobacco Society will be in a position to secure most any price it sees proper to put on the pooled tobacco, but, if on the other hand, a full acreage should be pitched by the middle of this month, it may be some time before the Society can make a good sale. The trust and independents are keeping thoroughly posted on the outlook for a crop of tobacco, this year, and their desire to purchase, or their disinterestedness in that particular, will be governed by crop developments in the next few weeks. It is just possible that a small acreage this year will produce more money for the grower than an average crop will. Many of the growers are now interested in two crops.

Preacher's Salaries Very Low.

It is interesting and instructive to notice the way in which the cultivated crops and the farm livestock get about in the world and do man good. Thus the potato and maize may be regarded as a gift of this country to all the other main parts of the world. From those other parts we get rice, the sugar cane, the horse, the cow, the sheep and much else. There is much that is very singular along here. The sugar cane, now so prominent in the South, began in the eastern confines of Asia, was not given to either the Greeks or the Romans, got into Arabia about the latter part of the thirteenth century; from there it went to Africa; was carried by the Moors into Spain; by the Spaniards and Portuguese into the West Indian islands. It came to us from there. Rice, which is credited with having "altered the face of the globe and the destiny of nations," is of Asiatic origin also and has traveled by slow degrees until it came to us just suited to our land and climatic conditions.

Boat Built of Concrete.

It will puzzle most people to that a boat built of concrete will not only float, but has a greater carrying capacity, is more durable and even lighter than a strongly constructed wooden boat. The Panama Canal Commission has just launched on the banks of the Panama Canal a big barge built of re-enforced concrete, which weighs 60,000 pounds, and two others will soon be finished. These vessels, it is said, are unaffected by seaworms, marine vegetation, does not adhere to them, and they are practically indestructible.

The growth of white clover, weeds and other growth, threatening to interfere with the gathering of the crop of blue grass seed which at best is not up to the average. In Bourbon county, W. B. Woodford, sold the seed on one thousand acres for $1,800. Last year he got $3,000 for the seed from the same territory. W. A. Thomas, of the same county, has sold ten thousand bushels for August delivery for eighty cents per bushel. We have heard of no sales from the stripper, and the price will probably not be fixed until that time arrives.—Winchester Democrat.

Farmers in various localities in this part of the state complain that some worm or insect is working in the growing wheat, causing it to fall over. Some declare that the pest is the "jointworm" while others say it is the "heart worm."—Lawrenceburg Press.

The mercury was caught loafing down about 40 several mornings the past week, but no frost resulted.

Following is a brief extract from the speech made by United States Senator W. O. Bradley at the dedication of Kentucky's new capitol building on the 3d inst:

"We are assembled at this splendid capitol, the most enduring monument to those who conceived and constructed it; near the historic stream that lavas the base of cliffs which for ages, like grim sentinels, have stood guard over it, above whose rugged brow lies the beautiful city of the dead in which sleep so many brave and gifted sons of Kentucky. In the midst of the inspiring scene, looking backward through the vista of the past, we are moved by many tender memories and inspired with an ambition and patriotism which renews the strength of the old nerves, the arms and hearts of the young, who are soon to take the places of those who now direct the affairs of our beloved commonwealth."

"God grant that in wisdom, learning and all that makes men truly good and great, they may surpass those who have gone and those who are now entering the twilight that soon shall melt into everlasting earthly darkness as much as this splendid building surpasses in grandeur that which it supersedes."

"While we with so much pleasurable pride dedicate this building, we turn with painful and affectionate regret from the old Capitol, around which cluster so many precious and glorious memories."

"To-day the din of party clamor is still and the wings of political strife are folded and at rest. Every sword is sheathed, and beneath the overhanging sky, peace, sweet peace, like a gentle benediction, hovers over all. We have forgotten all animosity, and are impressed only with the inspiring thought that we are Kentuckians, proud of the state which we all love so devotedly."

"The whole history of the commonwealth now passes before us, not as an insubstantial dream but as a splendid reality that causes each heart to swell with conscious pride."

"We see Kentucky in the beginning—a gloomy and almost impenetrable wilderness, whose stillness was broken alone by the cries of savages and wild beasts, the songs of the birds and the rippling of many waters. Into this wild and dangerous land, boldly and fearlessly came Boone, Kenton, Harrod, Logan, McAfee, Whitley and many other sturdy pioneers."

"Their muscles were strong as iron, their nerves elastic as Damascus blades and their heads imbued with indomitable courage and noble resolution."

"In 1790 our population was only 73,877; now it is 2,500,000. Then our wealth was so insignificant that we have no estimate of its amount now the taxable wealth is $822,000,000."

"Regretfully we turn from this spot, because each appreciates the fact that we shall feel the inspiration of national and state love that this occasion inspires, for the probability is that even the youngest will not live to witness another dedication."

Arthur B. Rouse, of Boone county, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress, was in Trimble last week. He made his third trip across the county in order to meet each voter.

Mr. Rouse has made an active canvass of the district and by the reports from each county he seems to be an easy winner.

This is the first opportunity in years that the country portion of the district has had the opportunity to have a man of us in Congress and the voters of rural districts should consider well the opportunity of voting for Mr. Rouse.

Mr. Rouse is well qualified for the office, having had sufficient experience in Washington as the Secretary to his opponent and to the present Congressman to enter upon the discharge of the duties without the usual training that is necessary for a new member.—Carrollton News.

In the tobacco field of R. B. Huey, of Commissary neighborhood, is a strip of land which was cultivated in potatoes, last year, and this year the cutworms destroyed nearly every tobacco plant set thereon. Mr. Huey says he can tell to the very row to which the potato patch came, by the work of the cutworms.

One week from next Saturday the Democratic primary election to nominate a candidate for Congress in this district will be held.

The first day of this month is said to have been the coldest first day of June in the last forty years.

Whereas, the decree of death has taken from our fraternal circle our beloved brother, REV. JAMES V. ROGERS, an especially to express our sorrow over the severance of our earthly ties, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Rogers the craft has lost a true and worthy brother whose devotion to the principles of masonry is worthy of emulation and whose memory will long be cherished because of his manifold qualities of heart and mind. He was ever true to the interests of the craft, and contribute in every way to its upbuilding. As the Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky he won the respect and esteem of a large circle and demonstrated on him the honor had been worthily bestowed. As a charter member of Walton Lodge his memory to us is especially dear as he did much to make a masonic lodge a permanency in Walton, and we owe him a debt of gratitude for his untiring efforts in behalf of the welfare of the lodge, and as a special token we request that a page be set apart in our journal for these resolutions as a memorial to our departed brother.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy is tendered to the bereaved relatives; that the usual badge of mourning be worn by the members, and these resolutions be published in the Boone County Recorder and the Masonic Home Journal.

C. M. BALDON,
Burlington, Kentucky.

I am only doing justice to the fact that their ideals in life are higher, their motives purer and their records of crime less than those of any other class of people. The great majority of them are honest, industrious, intelligent and charitable. What can constitute a higher type of citizenship?

The atmosphere of the farm is pure. It speaks for itself. From it has come the majority of the greatest and best men and women of the nation. Statistics prove this assertion. No where does the love of home so strong as among farm people, and it is a recognized fact that "no home makes the nation." Theodore Roosevelt recognized this when he said: "There is no more important person exerting her influence upon the nation than the farmer's wife, no more important home than the farmer's home, and it is of national importance to do the best we can for both."

Ask any merchant in any town or city to what class of people he would rather extend credit, and he will tell you the farmer every time; but in order to pay his honest debt the farmer and his family must have some of the pleasures of life and some of the necessities. People representing the great majority of the country should not be obliged to do this. They should receive a just compensation for the products of their farms.

The thought of any farmer people is not "How much can I get out of you?" but "How much can I do for you?" The old saying that "virtue is its own reward" does not seem to apply to the farmer on this earth, but it may in the hereafter. He does not seem to be getting anything really except work and wear. The same rate is placed on him as upon the man whose business pays a 25 per cent dividend. He does not receive the position of honor and trust that are given men in other callings. He knows that it is the majority of cases it is only the poorest of any profession who stay in the country, for the attractions of the great American dollar to most people are far greater than the song of birds, the hum of bees, green grass, pure air and beautiful sunshine.

His charity! If you are unfortunate ask any one in the country for money or food. If they have it, see how quickly you will receive it. Ask the city for the same and you will get—30 days. I know there is a law against begging, but there is no law which prevents a person from being hungry and the unfortunate Charity towards all is one of the strong characteristics of the American farmer.—Mrs. George S. Ladd. Reproduced by request.

TOBACCO CROP REPORT

Seventy-Five Per Cent of The Expected Acreage is Set.

Boyle County Leads So Far As Heard From, with an Increase of 100 Per Cent.

(By E. T. Robards).

Lexington, Ky., June 11. A superabundance of rainfall marked the conditions of the past week, coupled with efficiency in warm sunshine and a temperature showing 10 degrees below normal. The planting season was continuous throughout the week, and the quantity planted would have been much greater, had not the plants been retarded by the continued cool weather. Some planters are done, but many have from 35 to 40 per cent remaining unplanted. The showers were so distributed that it became necessary to plant mostly by hand, although we had a few days that showed a second was in a suitable condition to be planted.

From reports covering about thirty-five of the leading Burley planting counties, we conclude that there is planted 75 per cent and the remainder will doubtless be completed within the next week or ten days. The fact is, while the lateness of the plants has made it difficult to rapidly still the land is ready, and there will be less difficulty getting plenty plants to set out the country, than has been at any time in the past.

While there are a few isolated cases of real shortage in plants ready to set, in the winter, all will have plenty and most of them enough to set another crop of like size. There are alarmists who are trying to cause a feeling of fear of the crop maturing before frost. It only requires about ninety days of ordinary growing weather, to mature tobacco, and the crop will be all practically planted by June 30, so this will bring it to the knife September 5 to 10, which will be in ample time for the country and even earlier, if the season suffices.

We still hear of other purchases of tobacco in price ranging from $10, 15 and 20 to its one cent, and while on an average this is about three cents under our market average here last season, it will yield the farmer a good profit on his investment and the tenant fair returns on his labor.

The reports we get from the district, clearly indicate material increase in the proposed acreage. So far Boyle county leads, with 100 per cent increase, but this county, in the past only raised about one-eighth (or 12½ per cent) of some of the larger counties.

Shelby county reports a proposed increase of 33 1-3 per cent which is a large gain for an old Burley growing county, although she does not rank near the front in acreage.

Grant county reports an increase of 20 per cent. Quite a number of counties have not as yet reported, so that we shall have to wait until next week to get a better line on the proposed increase.

Election Officers.

Following is a list of the officers to conduct the Democratic Congressional primary election in this county, next Saturday:

Burlington—J. C. Stephens and O. P. Phipps, judges; C. C. Roberts, clerk; J. A. Hueston, sheriff.

Constance—Sam Aylor and M. Souther, judges; Wash Tanner, clerk; J. D. Cloud, sheriff.

So firm is the belief that this year's crop will be a short one that a number of growers in the pool, who have money to spare have bought the crops of the hard pressed members of the pool, in the reasonable belief that the price of tobacco will be higher next winter than it was last winter and that all the pool of tobacco will be sold at most remunerative prices. Of course, there is always more or less talk every year about the probability of a short crop, but when the growers themselves begin buying up last year's crop, it shows there is a good reason for believing that this year's crop will be a short one.—Farmers' Home Journal.

One of the biggest cattle deals that ever took place in the state was consummated last week when the Stewart, Sanders, Bell Co., of Louisville, sold 150 head of steers, mostly their own feeding, to Morris & McCandless, Philadelphia, and Baltimore packers at $80 a hundred. The aggregate amounted to $60,000, and figured a nice profit to the owners.

The Horse and the Auto.

It is hard to believe that, with the enormous increase in the number of automobiles, the horse is still so splendidly holding his own. According to a report by the United States Department of Agriculture, the number of horses in the United States today is over 11,000,000. This is 400,000 more than the previous year. It is an average, ten dollars more per head than a year ago.

All lovers of the horse must rejoice to see the automobile replacing him of some of his cruel loads, but let no man dream the automobile will supplant him. Men are born every day who love horses, not because they can serve them as beasts of burden or means of transportation, but because they are horses. These would never be replaced by an intelligent, well-bred horse five miles than steer an automobile from Maine to California over the finest boulevard ever built—Dumb Animals.

Three thousand five hundred and sixty-four automobiles were registered in this state during April and May, 1914. In the latter month, the largest number in any single month. The estimated average cost of these machines is $1,000, making a total of over three and a half million dollars spent here in this direction. Farmers are buying more than half the machines, it is said—Indiana Farmer.

Theodore Roosevelt will be given a royal welcome home next Saturday.

The petition of Henry Youtsey, who is serving a life sentence in the penitentiary for the murder of Gov. Goebel, has been presented to the board of prison commissions, but no action has been taken on it.

It is stated that if one grain of corn could be added to each ear there would be enough revenue thus derived to pay for all the agricultural colleges now in operation, and that if no seed were planted without being tested, our crops would be so much larger in amount sufficient to pay the national debt every year.

Advices from Woodford county say: "The condition of the growing wheat crop in this section is furnishing the farmers a cause of anxiety. It has been observed the last few days that the heavy fields, about one fourth of the wheat stalks have given away near the ground. This is believed to be caused by the heavy rain, though it is said that the work of this enemy of the wheat grower is not as a rule manifest, at so early a period in the season."

The farmers were much interested in the discussions and seem to be doing their own thinking. Many think that the contract will be changed and a pool larger than any we have ever had will be formed. The disposition is to cut down the official expenses, to cut out the burley orators and to pool the tobacco through the people as was done in 1906, thereby saving thousands of dollars. The tobacco to come early to market at a less expense and lower price.—Owen Democrat.

Alexander Chiles, a negro lawyer of Lexington, was a passenger on the C. & O. railroad from Virginia to his home at Lexington. When the train reached the Kentucky lines Chiles was ordered into the war for colored passengers according to the "Jim Crow" law. Chiles claimed that the law did not apply to interstate passengers and that the road for ten thousand dollars. The railroad won the case in the State Courts and he carried it to the Supreme Court which dismissed his appeal.

When the Burley Tobacco Society adopted resolutions denouncing Hon. J. C. Cantrill, candidate for Congress in the Seventh district, it played into the hand exactly as he desired, and showed its hand at the same time. Cantrill is a slick political duck, and when a candidate two years ago he played the Burley Tobacco Society to his own advantage and he is doing the same thing now. Cantrill does not care whether the Burley Tobacco Society sinks or swims, if he retains his seat in Congress by successfully playing both ends of the tobacco question against the middle in his own interest.

The District Committee of the Burley Society in session last week at Lexington, J. Campbell Cantrill was denounced as a traitor to the cause. Encouraging reports of the 1910 pooling campaign came from a number of the counties. Some counties are taking the expedient of pooling their crops conditionally—that is, while the regular society pooling pledge is not signed, the growers pledged themselves to pool upon condition that 50 per cent of acreage is signed up. In some other counties the campaign has been mainly directed toward convincing the independents and trying to get them to join the pool, with the understanding that if they will come in the "pool" they can be relied on to stay in the pool.

It is the natural tendency to become discouraged and doubt the possibility of a corn crop when the season remains below the normal temperature, as during this season. This is so because corn requires warm weather. But turning to the season of 1907 it will be remembered that it was very cool, as much so as this season, yet past June 10th when the weather became warm. During that year Indiana grew 150,502,420 bushels of corn, which is considerably more than the five year average. This was an average of 37.39 bushels per acre, the five year average being a little over 36.00 bushels per acre. These facts suggest that there is nothing as yet to discourage us about the corn crop. Wheat, oats and meadows are generally reported in good condition for fair crops, as cool moist weather is all right for them.—Indiana Farmer.

The Iowa Experiment Station has been conducting a series of experiments in feeding work horses. It has been found that oats are too expensive to feed large quantities and that the hay may be greatly cheapened by substituting oil meal, cotton seed meal or gluten feed. The health, spirit and endurance of the horse was the same when fed corn in combination with one of those feeds as when oats were fed. These experiments show that oil meal may be worth as much as a ton for horse feeding and cottonseed meal a little more. The horses did a hard summer's work on this feed without any considerable loss in flesh. These experiments are of great value to farmers everywhere as the question of feeding the work horse has been the same time in such a way as to keep them in good flesh is an important one. The results of the experiments have been published in a bulletin form and may be obtained free by writing to Director of the Iowa Experiment Station, Ames, Iowa, and asking for it.

TEXT BOOK COMMISSION

Meet And Organize—Wednesday the 29th Will Meet Again to Adopt Text Books.

The county text book commission, composed of County Superintendent Edgar Riley, chairman; Dr. J. L. Peddicord and Leslie Harrison, county teachers examiners and ex-officio members of the commission; L. A. Conner, elected by the county board of education, and F. C. O. Morgan, of Walton, appointed by the State superintendent of public instruction, was in session at the office of Sup't. Riley, last Tuesday. The commission perfected its organization by electing Dr. F. L. Peddicord, secretary. The commission met Wednesday, the 29th inst., as the day upon which to hold another meeting for the purpose of adopting text books to be used by the high schools in the county. Quite a number of companies that publish school books are expected to be present by representatives at this meeting of the commission. The book adopted by the commission will be used for a period of four years.

This is a very busy time with the farmers. Their corn is yet to receive its cultivation while their hay and wheat are being put up. They have with tobacco, needing attention.

The Morgan men reunion will be held at the Chas. Morgan grounds, August 16 and 17. The members of the Orphan Brigade have been invited to meet with Morgan's men this year.

A large cattle deal was completed in Owensboro by Alexander H. Huggins by the sale of 500 head of cattle to New York and Chicago buyers. The purchase price was eleven cents for steers and ten cents for cows. One-half of the cattle were sent to New York and the other half to Chicago.

While taking a free ride from Middleboro to Pineville, to attend a political convention, Chas. Patterson fell from the top of a freight car and was killed. He was drowned and the cause of death was caused from the death. The court says that his death was caused from an accident and that Patterson assumed the risk in riding on top of the train.

The speech made by Judge O'Rear in Henry county, recently, on the tobacco question, is non-partisan and radical in its trend and is the advocacy of a policy, which if followed up, would convert this government into a despotism. When a member of the legislature in the State depends from the bench to address a court day crowd, and advocates the enactment of a law that would prevent a farmer from growing tobacco if he did not handle it to suit Judge O'Rear, it is time for Kentuckians to think whether they are drifting.

A dispatch from Washington says the Republicans are at sea as to their candidate for Governor. It says: "Their impressions as to the identity of the Republican candidate for Governor at this date are hazy. E. T. Frank, of Owensboro, will please the whisky and antagonize the tobacco interests. Judge E. C. O'Rear will please the tobacco and offend the whisky interest. Gov. W. H. Cox will displease no one, but may not please any interests well enough, while the boom of the whisky General James B. Breathitt seems to be lagging, they say."

A GOOD WAY

To Keep the Boys and Girls On The Farm and Make Good Citizens Out of them.

The surest way to interest children in farming is to let them make a little real money out of it; money that they can call their own and spend in any reasonable way. You remember how it was yourself. You couldn't see any fun in farming until you began to find a little profit in the business. You became enthusiastic after a good season which gave you a chance to save money. The boy's first paying garden and the girl's nice flock of profitable chickens will anchor their swerve if anything will do it. A little good advice will soon start the extremely important habit of saving money. Can he earn $50 a year? Sometimes fifty dollars placed in a savings bank every year will amount in 30 years at 4 per cent to the very respectable sum of $184.46, enough for a good start in business. But the moral and business training that goes with it should be worth more than the money. A successful boy is a pretty sure to become a successful man. The farm boy who saves money every year is not likely to grow into the kind of men who fill the poorhouses or live on their creditors or drift about the country telling hard luck stories. They will be too busy being good substantial citizens and a credit to the parents who gave them a right start.

C. M. Baldon has a new advertisement in the Recorder this week.

The unusual mild weather in March this year has caused the best prospects for a bountiful potato crop than has ever been seen in the states of Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana and Ohio. Reports come from Michigan, Wisconsin, and New York of like promises, so there should be produced the largest yield in the history of potato farming, providing no blight should overtake the crop. As yet there has been produced no satisfactory potato harvest in the central states, the majority of farmers depending entirely on outside hired help to scratch out the tubers and pick them up after a two-horse plow turns them out. This is a slow and uncertain process, as well as a costly one. In Jefferson county, Kentucky, the largest potato shipping center in the United States, prices have for years been very remunerative, bringing an average of about two dollars per barrel, with a yield of about sixty-five barrels per acre of marketable tubers.

Content of the recent action of the State Board of Equalization, Inc., in the assessment of Jefferson county 12 per cent, and thereby increasing the tax bills in proportion will be instituted in the courts at once by a committee appointed for that purpose. The contest will involve the constitutionality of the law providing for a State Board of Equalization.

W. E. Collins, of Ludlow, who served Uncle Sam in the S. A. war, came out last Tuesday, and pulled off a sale of his horse, the Hamel estate over on Elijah's creek, Geo. E. McGlasson being the purchaser.

So many persons attended a lot of Lawson Brown's tobacco plants down on Woolper creek, putting Mr. Brown entirely out of the tobacco raising fraternity.

FAILURE TO LIST THEIR CANINES

Gets Various Grant County Citizens Into Trouble.

Summonses Issued For Large Number of Dog Owners.

(Grant County News.) The County Court has been busy during the past two weeks trying the cases of numerous dog owners who failed to list their canines with the assessor last year.

In looking over the lists County Attorney Adams discovered that only a small number of the dogs in Grant county had been listed with the Assessor. He promptly had summonses issued for a large number and the court has been busy trying the cases for several days.

Under the law it is a fine to not list your dog, and most of those who have been summoned have been fined the sum of one cent and costs.

This means that the State will get one cent for each dog not listed while the costs, amounting to $7.50 go to the County Attorney and other court officers. Five dollars of the costs go to the County Attorney, and he bids fair to reap a pretty good harvest, in case he is successful in finding as many dogs not listed as he thinks he will.

Many of the dog owners claim that they did not list their dogs because the Assessor or his deputies did not ask them to, while others claim that in filling out the assessor's blanks they did not find the space set aside for listing dogs.

It is a safe guess that not more than 25 per cent. of the dogs in Grant county were listed with the Assessor last year.

Several Burlingtonites went to Florence last Tuesday morning to see the Oldland tourists pass through. There were about 40 motor cars in the line, and they were traveling at a high rate of speed.

In renewing his subscription to the Recorder J. W. Campbell, of Latonia, writes: "We can't do without the Recorder—it certainly is a welcome visitor at our house. Father and I are both doing well, and hope the Recorder is having a prosperous year."

A year's subscription to the Recorder resulted in at least one grower getting several acres of tobacco set out, last week, which he might not have succeeded to do had he not been a subscriber. A year's subscription to your county paper is a good investment for many reasons.

THE LITTLE BROWN JUG

AT KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold is himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. (Unaware of each other's position, both Appleweights set out to make the other prospective Appleweight. Ardmore organizes a big hunt for Griswold also takes the bait. Col. Collins, Atlanta reporter, is arrested by Ardmore, but released as a press agent for the young millionaire's expedition. Griswold's men capture Bill Appleweight.

The members of Griswold's party who had been thrown round to the farther side of the church began to appear one at a time. There was no nervousness among any of the party—a fact that impressed Griswold. They were all risking much in this enterprise, but they were outwardly unperturbed, and chewing their tobacco silently while they awaited the return of the two active agents in the conspiracy who had dealt directly with Appleweight. Habersham counted heads, and announced all present or accounted for.

The tall leader who had ridden the mule was the first to rise out of the underbrush, through which he had crawled circumspectly from the rear of the church. His companion followed a few seconds later.

"We've got Bill, all tied and gagged and a-sitting of his horse," drawled the leader, "and the horse is tied to the back fence. Rest of his boys thought he'd gone ahead, but they may miss him and come back. He's safe enough, and of we keep away from him we'll be ready to light out of the gang scents trouble and come back to look for Bill."

"You're sure he's tied up so he can't break away or yell?"

"He's as good as dead, a-sittin' of his horse in the thickest back track."

"And now," said Habersham, "what we've got to do is to make a run for it and land him across the border, and stick him into a North Carolina jail, where he rightfully belongs. The question is, is he in one night, or had we better look him up some place on this side the line and take another night for it? The sheriff over there in Kildare is Appleweight's cousin, but we'll look him up with Bill, to make a family party of it."

"It'd better not try too much to-night," counseled Griswold. "It's a big thing to have the man himself. If it were not for the matter of putting Gov. Dangerfield in a hole, I'd favor burying with Appleweight to Columbia, just for the moral effect of it on the people of South Carolina. We'd make a big killing for the administration that way, Habersham."

"Yes, you'd make a killing all right, but you'd have Bill Appleweight on your hands, which Gov. Osborne has not until lately been anxious for," replied Habersham, in a low tone that was heard by no one but his low preceptor.

"You'd better get over the idea that we're afraid of this outlaw," rejoined Griswold. "The governor of North Carolina dare not call his soul his own where these hill people are concerned; but the governor of South Carolina is a different sort."

While they thus stood on South Carolina soil, waiting for the safe and complete dispersion of the Mount Nebo congregation before seizing the captive, they had gagged and tied at the rear of the little church, the fates were ordering a very different termination of the night's business.

Miss Jerry Dangerfield, galloping away from the duke of Ballywinkle, with no thought but to widen the distance between them, turned off at the park cross-road, which began well enough, but degenerated rapidly into a miserable trail, through which she was obliged to walk her horse. Before she was aware of it she was in the midst of a clearing where laborers had been cutting timber, and she found, on turning to make her way, that she was quite lost. Three trails, all seemingly alike, struck off into the forest. She spoke aloud to the horse to reassure herself, and smiled as she viewed the grimy tracks of stumps. She must, however, and her way back to Ardmore, and she was alone when Jerry was heard to be serious with her. She was really pleased her to see Jerry, and she knew that the time had long passed for her return to the house. She did not know that three men had witnessed her flight from the duke, or that they had taken swift vengeance upon him for his unpardonable conduct in the moon-blanching road. It was not Jerry's way to accept misfortune tamely, and after eliciting the help of timber that shut her in, in the hope of determining where she had entered, she chose a trail at random and plunged into the woods. She assumed that probably all the roads and paths on the estate led more or less directly to the great house or to some lodge or bungalow. She had lost her riding-crop in her mad flight, and she broke off a switch, tossing its leaves into the moonlight and laughing softly as they rained about her.

Suddenly ahead of her through the woods floated the sound of singing—one of those strange, wavering, plaintive cantiques peculiar to the south. She rode on, thinking to find help and a guide back to Ardley; then the music ceased, and lights now flashed faintly before her, but she went forward guardedly.

"I'm much more lost than I thought I was, for I must be away off the estate," she reflected. She turned and rode back a few rods and dismounted, and then she went forward guardedly. She was disappointed at not finding a camp of Ardmore's wood-cutters, to whom she would unhesitatingly have confided herself; but it seemed wise now to exercise caution in drawing to the attention of strangers. She did not know that she had crossed the state line and was in South Carolina, or that the singing she had heard floated from the windows of Mount Nebo church.

She became now the astonished witness of a series of incidents that occurred with such swiftness that she had no time to breathe. A tall, loosely articulated man came from the direction of the church and walked toward her. She knelt at the tree and watched, the moonlight giving her a clear view of a rustic somewhat past middle age, whose chief characteristics seemed to be a grizzled beard and long arms that swung oddly at his side. The brim of his wool hat was turned up sharply from his forehead, and she had a glimpse of the small, keen, gray eyes with which he swept the forest before him. He freed his horse which she had not before noticed, and she expected him to mount and ride away to join others of the congregation whom she heard making off in a road beyond the church. Then, with a quickness and deftness that baffled her eyes, two men rose beside him just as he was about to mount; there was no outcry and no sound of scuffling, so quick was the descent and so perfect the understanding between the captors. In a moment the man was gathered up, bound, and flung on his saddle. She had a better view of him, now that he was helpless, though a gas had been forced into his mouth and a handkerchief tied over his eyes, so that he presented a grotesque appearance. She was so absorbed that she forgot to be afraid; never in her life had she witnessed anything so amazing as this; and now, to her more Renewed His Efforts to Free Himself. complete bewilderment, the captors, after carefully inspecting their work, and finding it satisfactory, seemed to disappear utterly from the face of the earth.

In the woods to her left she thought she heard a horse neigh; then she saw shadows moving in that direction; and again, from the road, she heard the hief debate of the two men as to the whereabouts of "Bill"; and it struck Jerry humorously that he would not soon see his friends unless they came and helped him out of his predicament.

It may help to an understanding of Miss Jerry Dangerfield's character if it is recorded here that never in her short life had she failed to respond to the call of impulse. She was lost in the woods, and strange men lurked about; a man had been attacked, seized, and left sitting in a state of absurd helplessness on a horse presumably his own, and there was no guessing what dire penalty his captors had in store for him.

Quiet reigned in the neighborhood of the church; the lights had blinked out; the bang of the closing shutters reassured Jerry, and she crept on her knees toward the unconscious captive, loosed his horse's rein and led it rapidly toward her own horse. Her blindfolded prisoner, thinking his original captors were carrying him off, renewed his efforts to free himself.

Jerry gained her own saddle in the least bit of a panic, and when she had mounted and made sure of the leading-strap with which her prisoner's horse was provided, she rode on calmly, as if nothing had happened. She reached the clearing, where the stumps again grimly mocked her. She stopped to listen, and heard through the still night first one cry and then many voices in various keys of alarm and rage. Then she bent toward the prisoner, tore the bandage from his eyes, and with more difficulty freed him of the gag. He blinked and spluttered at this unexpected deliverance, then blined and spluttered afresh at seeing that his captor was a young woman, who was plainly not of his world. Jerry watched him wonderingly, then addressed him in her most agreeable tone.

"You were caught and tied by two men over there by a church. I saw them, and when they went off and left you, I came along and brought you with me, thinking to save your life. I want to get home as quickly as possible, and though I do not know you, and am quite sure we never met before, I hope you will kindly guide me to Ardley, and thereby render me a service I shall always deeply appreciate."

Mr. Bill Appleweight, alias Poteet, was well hardened to the shocks of time, but the pleasant-voiced girl, coolly sitting her horse, and holding his own link steed by a strap, was the most amazing human being that had yet dawned on his horizon. He was not stupid, but Jerry's manner of speech had baffled more sophisticated minds than Appleweight's, and the sweet sincerity of her tone, and her frank countenance, hallowed as it was by the moonlight, brought in the old law's mind a befuddlement not wholly unlike that which had possessed the wits of many young gallants south of the Potomac who had laid siege to Jerry Dangerfield's heart. But the cries behind them were more pronounced, and Appleweight was nothing if not a man of action.

"Take these things off me," he commanded fiercely, "and I'll see you safe to Ardley."

"Not in the least," replied Jerry, who was herself not unmindful of the voices behind. "You will kindly tell me the way, and I will accommodate my pace to that of your own somewhat ill-nourished beast. And as there's a mo' looking for you back there, all ready to hang you to one of these noble forest trees, I advise you to use more haste and less caution in pointing the way."

Appleweight lifted his head and took his bearing. Then he nodded toward one of the three trails which had so baffled Jerry when first she broke into the clearing.

"That's the rightest," said Appleweight, "and we'd better go."

She set the pace at a trot, and was relieved in a few minutes to pass one or two landmarks which she remembered from her flight through the woods. As they splashed through the brook she had forded, she was quite confident that the captive was playing possum, but in the next minute she should strike the high-road to Ardley which she abandoned to throw off the duke of Ballywinkle. It was now ten o'clock, and the moon was sinking behind the forest trees. Jerry took advantage of an occasional straight strip of road to go forward at a gallop, but these stretches did not offer frequently, and the two riders kept pretty steadily to a smart trot.

As they walked their horses through a bit of sand, the prisoner spoke: "Who air y'u, little gal?"

Jerry turned in the saddle, so that Appleweight enjoyed a full view of her face.

"I am perfectly willing to tell you my name, but first it would be more courteous for you to tell me yours, partner."

"I am Jerry Dangerfield, and you are a band of outlaws who undoubtedly intend to do you harm."

He laughed—a curious, chuckling laugh. He had ceased to struggle at his bonds, but seemed resigned to his strange fate. He had not answered Jerry's question, and had no intention of doing so. The sudden attack at the church had aroused all his cunning. Appleweight, alias Poteet, was an old wolf, and knew well the ways of the trapper; but the bold attempt to kidnap him was a new feature of the game as heretofore played along the border. He did not make it out; nor was he wholly satisfied with the girl's explanation of her presence in that out-of-the-way place.

He had several times called out directions as they crossed other paths in the forest, and they now reached the main trunk road of the estate. The red bungalow, Jerry knew, was not far away. Her prisoner spoke again.

Turpentine and Forests. You do not know the turpentine tappers, but if you come to Florida you will soon find them out. It is a curious business that will deliberately destroy all the forests of a half dozen states for a little immediate gain; and still more curious is the lassitude that allows the destruction to go on. The French have a method of tapping trees which gives a profitable return and leaves the trees practically uninjured. In this way an industry is perpetuated, but our American tapping is another thing.

The trees are cut with a broad ax, heaving out great slices and leaving scars from which the resin flows into boxes at the bottom of the cut and is scraped once a month into casks. The cut is repeated each year, and in six or seven years the tree is exhausted. So go great forests of pine that stand 80 to 100 feet high, leaving up thousands of acres of standing lumber which will be cut down by portable sawmills. The end of it all is a hardwood waste.—E. P. Fowell, in Outlook.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

"I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered for I could hardly stand the pains in my side, especially my right side, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on."

SADIE MULLER, 228 N. E. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drug out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacement, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

"Worn to a Frazzle." When President Roosevelt popularized the word "frazzle" he reminded lots of women of the only expression that tells how they feel after the work of washday or housecleaning with common old yellow laundry soap. Easy Task laundry soap—the hard, white, pure, quick-action soap—cuts the work square in two and keeps women from getting frazzled out.

Rather Personal. Tallman—Only a fool makes the same sort of mistake the second time. Shortman—Do you mean to insinuate that I am a fool?

Tallman—Certainly not. Shortman—Well, I didn't know, I've been married twice.

Good Work Proceeds Slowly. At the present rate of increase nearly forty-five years must elapse before sufficient hospital accommodations to provide for all the indigent consumptives in the United States will be provided, declares the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Although over 7,000 beds in hospitals, sanatoria, camps and wards for tuberculous patients were established last year, there are fully 300,000 indigent consumptives who ought to be placed in such institutions and a total of only 23,720 beds in the entire country. On May 1, 1909, there were 15,244 beds for consumptives and 294 institutions. The annual report of the national association shows an increase of 99 institutions and 7,500 beds.

Heretofore, the guiding hand we recognize in the ordering of our lives, has chosen to remove to another field of service, one of our members, Mrs. Anna A. Hind, and, wherever by said move, the Epworth League of Walton, suffers the loss of its efficient president, therefore, he is resolved that we, the members of the League, desire to formally express regret that such a move has seemed advisable; that we feel deeply the loss sustained, and that it is with regretful reluctance, we give our consent.

A Physician's Straight Talk.

In a recent issue of the Sunday School Times a prominent physician, Dr. Woods Hutchinson, writes a stirring article which is well calculated to dissipate the illusions that still prevail in some quarters concerning both the medicinal and nutritive value of alcoholic stimulants.

He calls attention to the striking fact that eagerly as alcoholic beverages have been consumed and constantly as they have been in use by the race for many centuries, men have never developed an instinct or natural appetite for them. He shows that alcohol is a toxin or poison produced by a germ in order to kill another.

He states that the seeming improvement in one's physical condition that alcohol sometimes produces is wholly imaginary, and due merely to a deadening of the nerves. He emphasizes the fact that while the consumption of food produces a sense of satiety, alcohol produces only an appetite with no natural or self-acting limitations. Finally, in concluding his article, he writes:

"In keeping and correspondence with its peculiar physiologic effect of numbing the sensibilities, especially the higher ones—indeed as a logical consequence—alcohol has effects upon the mental and moral sides of our nature which are most distressing and deplorable. So well known and so everywhere in evidence are they, that it is unnecessary here to describe or insist upon them. Which it may be true that much of this disaster, poverty and crime associated with alcohol is due to its power of revealing evil tendencies, this only makes the query more insistent: what good effects upon the higher and more desirable qualities of the race has alcohol to show as an offset for this deplorable tendency to heighten and exaggerate its worst and lowest?"

During the excessively high prices prevailing in this country the past winter there was considerable foreign mutton brought into the New York market and at that time it was at prices as low as 10 cents a pound.

It was not because there was not enough meat produced in this country but prices reached such high figures that a good profit was realized on importing from Australia. The quality of the foreign meat was good and as the carcasses were more closely trimmed, they netted a better profit to the dealers, the feet and surplus shanks being removed as well as kidneys and kidneys for many consumers seemed to prefer the Australian mutton but this may have been more of a fad. The fact remains however that foreign imports have begun and will continue as long as the packers keep prices so high as they have ruled.

In a speech at Lexington last week before the Bailey Society, District Commissioner of Agriculture, E. C. Rankin, who is an honorary member of the Board, expressed opposition to a recent clause in the contract for next year, and is reported to have said that "if it is necessary a law may be passed prohibiting the raising of tobacco next year."

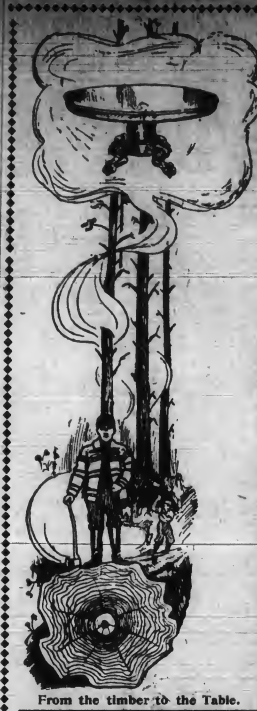

Now what do you think of that? Should the law makers get started in this direction they might say to the farmer with equal propriety you shall not raise wheat or potatoes or horses or cattle.—Georgetown Times.

Any person who has mind enough to think at all, is bound to think a person who makes such a speech is nothing short of a demagogue or a would-be tyrant.

The farm is a little world to itself where families may make and plan their surroundings, fashion and mould just such a home as they may see fit for the enjoyment of life. You may be able to guide with that is by the taste displayed in the arrangement of buildings, trees and shrubbery, etc.; then above all, to instill in the minds of the members of the household, refinement, order, neatness and a taste for the good and beautiful. But to do this each member must become interested in the surrounding neighborhood, coming in contact with friends by mingling with them both in and out of the home.—Ex.

THE LITTLE BROWN JUG AT KILDARE

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerefield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over the Applegate, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Applegate. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold also takes the field. Frank Collins, Atlanta reporter, is arrested by Ardmore, but released to become press agent for the young millionaire's expedition. Griswold's men capture Bill Applegate. Jerry Dangerefield discovers the captive outlaw and leads him to Ardmore, her own prisoner.

"Little gal, I'm an ole man, and I hain't never done y'u no harm. Your house is only a little way up thar, and I cain't be no more use to y'u. I want 'o go home, and if y'll help me onto this yere harness—" and he grinned as he viewed his bonds in the fuller light of the open road. Then hoofbeats thumped the soft earth of another of the trails that converged at this point, and Ardmore and Collins flashed out upon Jerry and her captive, adding a wild panic of horses.

Applegate twisted and turned in his saddle but Jerry instantly held up her hand and arrested the inquiries of her deliverers.

"Mr. Ardmore, this gentleman was most rudely set upon by two strangers as he was leaving a church over there somewhere in the woods. I'm lost, and as his appearance at the time and place seemed almost providential, I begged him to guide me toward home, which he has most courteously done," and Jerry, to give the proper touch to her explanation, twitched the reins by which she held her prisoner's horse, so that it danced, adding fresh absurdity to the wobbling figure of its bound rider.

"You are safe!" cried Ardmore in a low tone, to which Jerry nodded carefully, in a way that directed attention to the more immediate business at hand. He was not at once sure of his cue, but there seemed to be something familiar in the outlines of the man on horseback, and full identification broke upon him now with as sudden a vividness.

"Jugs," he began, addressing the prisoner smilingly, "dear old Jugs, to think you should meet again! Since you handed me the jug on the rear end of the train, a few nights ago, life has had new meanings for me, and I'm just as sorry as can be that I gave you the buttermilk. I wouldn't have done such a thing for billions in real money. And now that you have fallen into the excellent hands of Miss Dangerefield—"

"Dangerfield!" screamed the prisoner, lifting himself as high in the saddle as his bonds would permit.

"Certainly," replied Ardmore. "Your rescuer is none other than Miss Geraldine Dangerefield."

"Why, gal," began the outlaw, "of your pa's the guv'nor of North Carolina, him an' me's ole friends."

"Then will you kindly tell me your name?" asked Jerry.

"Allow me to complete the introduction," interrupted Collins, who had hung back in silence. "Unless my eyes deceive me, which is wholly improbable, this is a gentleman whom I once interviewed in the county jail at Raleigh, and he was known at that time as William Applegate, alias Poteet."

"You air right," admitted the prisoner without hesitation, and then, addressing Jerry: "Yer pa would be glad to know his darter had helped an ole friend like me, gal. Ye may hev heard him speak o' me."

"But how about that message in the cork of the jug you put on the train at Kildare?" demanded Ardmore. "And why did you send your brother to try to scare me to death at Raleigh?"

"That is not of the slightest importance," interrupted Jerry, gently playing with the tether which held Mr. Applegate; "nor does it matter that papa and this gentleman are friends. It is in fact the famous outlaw, Mr. William Applegate, then, papa or no papa, friend or no friend, he is a prisoner of the state of North Carolina."

"P'ine!" bawled Applegate—"as you the guv'nor's gal—"

"You have hit the situation exactly, Mr. Applegate; and as far as the office of governor is concerned, it is curiously allied by the young gentleman on your left, Mr. Thomas Ardmore. Let us now adjourn to his house, where, if I am not mistaken, a bit of cold fowl is usually to be found on the sideboard at this hour. But hold!"—and Jerry checked her horse—"where can we lodge this gentleman, Mr. Ardmore, until we decide upon his further fate?"

"We might put him in the wine cellar," suggested Ardmore.

"He shall be treated with the greatest consideration," said Jerry, and thereafter, no further adventure befaling them, they reached Ardrey, where their arrival occasioned the greatest excitement.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Meeting of Old Friends.

Habersham's men had proved exceedingly timid when it came to the business of threshing the woods for Applegate, whom they regarded with a new awe, now that he had vanished so mysteriously. They had searched the woods manfully, but the narrow paths that led away into the dim fastnesses of Ardrey were forbidding, and these men were not without their superstitions. They had awaited for years an opportunity to strike at the Applegate faction; they had at last a chance, and now, after weary hours of the morning, having found nothing but Applegate's wool hat, which only added to their mystification.

"We ought to have taken him away on the run," said Habersham bitterly, as he and Griswold discussed the matter on the veranda of the prosecutor's house and watched the coming of the dawn. "I didn't realize that those fellows lived in such mortal terror of the old man; but they refused to make off with him until the last of his friends had got 'o' out of the way. I ought to have had more sense myself than to have expected the old fox to sit tied up like a calf ready for market. We had all his friends accounted for—those that weren't at prayer meeting were marked down somewhere else, and we had a line flung pretty well round the church. Applegate's deliverance must have come from somewhere inside the Ardmore property. Perhaps the game warden picked him up."

"Perhaps the Indians captured him," suggested Griswold, yawning. "Or maybe some Martin came down on a parachute and hauled him up. Or, as scarlet fever is raging at Mr. Ardmore's castle,"—and his tone was icy—"Applegate was probably seized all of a sudden, and broke away in his delirium. Let's go to bed."

At eight o'clock he and Habersham rode into Turner Court House, and Found Nothing But Applegate's Wool Hat.

Griswold went at once to the inn to change his clothes. No further steps could be taken until some definite report was received as to Applegate's whereabouts.

It had been the most puerile transaction possible, and he was aware that a report of it, which he must write at once to Miss Barbara Osborne, would not impress that young woman with his capacity or trustworthiness in difficult occasions. The iron that had already entered into his soul drove deeper. He had ordered a fresh horse, and was resolved to return to Mount Nebo church for a personal study of the ground in broad daylight.

As he crossed the musty parlor of the little hotel, to his great astonishment Miss Osborne's black Phoebe, stationed where her eyes ranged the whole lower floor of the inn, drew attention to herself in an elaborate courtesy.

"Miss Barbara wish me t' say she does come heal on business, and she like 'o' see yo' all right away. She done 'bring' him back, and 'ar agwine ridin' twell 'you come back. She's a-gottin' ready, and I'll go tell hah you done come. She got a heap 'o' trouble, thet young missis, so she hev," and the black woman's pursed lips seemed to imply that Prof. Griswold was in some measure responsible for Miss Osborne's difficulties.

As he started out into the street a negro brought a horse bearing a better saddle than Mingy county had ever boasted, and hitched it near the horse he had secured for himself. An instant later he heard a quick step above, and Miss Osborne, noddingly followed by the black woman, came downstairs. She smiled and greeted him cordially, but there was trouble in her brown eyes.

"I didn't warn you of my coming. I didn't want to be a nuisance to you; there's a new—a most unaccountable perplexity. It doesn't seem right to burden you with it—you have already been no kind of helping me. I dare not turn to our oldest friends—I have been afraid to trust father's friends at all since Mr. Bosworth acted so traitorously."

"My time is entirely at your service, Miss Osborne, but I have a shameful report to make of myself. I must tell you how miserably I have failed, before you trust me any further. We—that is to say, the prosecuting attorney of this county and a party he got together of Applegate's enemies—caught the outlaw last night—look him with the greatest ease—but he got away from us! It was all my fault, and I'm deeply disgusted with myself!"

He described the capture and the subsequent mysterious disappearance of Applegate, and confessed the obvious necessity for great caution in further attempts to take the outlaw, now that he was on guard. Barbara laughed reassuringly at the end of the story.

"Those men must have felt funny when they went back to get the prisoner and found that he had gone up into the air. But there's a new feature of the case that's more serious than the loss of this man—" and the trouble again possessed her eyes. She drew from her purse a cutting from a newspaper and handed it to him. "That's from last night's Columbia Vidette, which is very hostile to my father."

He was already running over the heavily loaded column that set forth without equivocation the fact that Gov. Osborne had not been in Columbia since he went to New Orleans. It scouted the story that he was abroad in the state on official business connected with the Applegate case—the yarn which Griswold had forced upon the friendly reporter at the telegraph office in Columbia. The governor of a state, the Vidette went on to elaborate, could not vanish without leaving some trace of himself, and a Vidette representative had traced the steps of Gov. Osborne from New Orleans until he had again entered South Carolina under cover of night and for purposes which, for the honor of the state, the Vidette hesitated to disclose.

The writer of the article had exhausted the possibilities of gentle suggestion and vague innuendo in an effort to create an impression of mystery and to pique curiosity as to further developments, when, weary and worn at any hour, Griswold's wrath was aroused, not so much against the newspaper, which he assumed had some fire for its smothered trifle of smoke, but against the governor of South Carolina himself, who was causing the finest and noblest girl in the world infinite anxiety and pain.

"The thing is preposterous," he said lightly. "The idea that your father would attempt to enter his own state surreptitiously is inconceivable in these days when public men are denuded at any hour. Your father's man's right to deceive the press if he—"

It essential to his comfort and peace; but the intimation that your father is in South Carolina for any dishonorable purpose is preposterous. One thing, however, is certain, Miss Osborne, and that is that we must produce your father at the earliest possible moment."

"But"—and Barbara hesitated, and her eyes, near tears as they were, wrought great havoc in Griswold's soul—"but father must not be found until this Applegate matter is settled. You understand without making me speak the words—that he might not exactly view the matter as we do."

It was a painful subject; and the fact that she was driven by sheer force of circumstances to appeal to him, stranger, to aid her to perform a public service in her father's name rallied all his good impulses to her standard. It was too delicate a matter for discussion; it was a thing to be ignored; and he assumed at once a lighter tone.

"Come! We must solve the riddle of the lost prisoner at once, and your father will undoubtedly give an excellent account of himself when he gets ready. Meanwhile the fiction that he is personally carrying the war into the Applegate country must be maintained, and I shall stop to the railway station and wire the Columbia newspaper in his name that he is in Mingo county on the trail of the outlaws."

(To Start A Tight Screw.

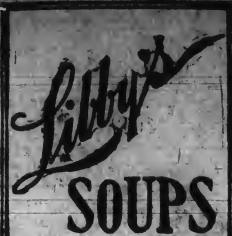

Lots of folks try to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw:

Heat a poker red hot and then hold it against the screw head for a little while, wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be removed quite easily with the same screw driver that just previously would not perform the work. The explanation is quite simple.

The red hot poker heats the screw, the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

Look Out, Boys!

A German professor has found that a boy in walking a mile through the streets of a town is exposed to 10,000,000 germs and microbes that may cause his death. It seems they never do cause his death, but the only safe way for a boy to do is to remain at home and take out the ashes and bring in the coal. If he feels any danger he can black the cookstove and whitewash the cellar.

Doyle Cheese

Andrew Carnegie, while eating with appetite and courage last month the dishes cooked by the young girls of the Margaret Morrison school in Pittsburgh, said:

"I have no fear before these experimental dishes. He who has eaten in France learns to eat boldly. 'Think of the French cheeses alone! 'Why, one afternoon in a restaurant in the Boulevard des Capucines, I heard a Frenchman say angrily: 'Water, look here, this cheese is walking all over the table.' 'Ah, have no fear, monsieur. It won't escape,' the waiter replied. 'If it goes too far, just call 'Jules, Jules!' It always answers to its name.'"

Casey at the Jet

"What's this I hear about Casey?" asked McGlinn.

"He's been trying to asphyxiate himself," said O'Reilly.

"Gwan! What did he do?"

"He lit every gas jet in the house and sat down and waited."—Every body's.

A Dreadful Wound
From a knife, gun, or can, rusty nail, firework, or of any other nature, demands prompt treatment with Bucklen's Arnica Salve to prevent blood poison or gangrene. It's the quickest, surest healer for all such wounds as also for Burns, Boils, Sores, Skin Eruptions, Eczema, Chapped Hands, Corns or Piles. 25c at Dentler's drug store, Erlanger.

The backward spring was not in the least discouraging to the weeds, which have made a healthy growth.

Because of the inability to get the surface completely with large shovels without raising them very deeply, they are fast falling into disuse with progressive corn growers. The small shovel does a more correct average quality of work throughout the season, although where persistent early rains delay cultivation and the land so that a desperate fight with weeds is imperative they may be used to advantage. Good farming with the small shovel weed seed from the soil obviates the necessity for such heroic measures. The surface cultivation that carries the soil under every square inch of the surface soil is also an effective weed fighter under all conditions and it spares the corn roots from disturbance. For effectively stirring the soil to some depth at the first cultivation and still do shallow cultivation the rest of the season many successful growers favor the gangs carrying three shovels. Four shovels on a side do scarcely any smoother job of work and they catch trash more persistently.

Whatever the type of cultivation, the operator should carry a vital mental picture of a soil crowded full of corn roots, increasing in numbers as the season advances. It is not a serious thing to cut one of these, but to repeat that 10,000 times to the acre, or 100,000 times a day, is nearly as bad as taking ear after ear from the crib and throwing it away. An ignorant man turned loose with a cultivator in big corn can practically destroy a load of corn in a day in this way.

Laws Now in Effect.

Laws passed by the last Legislature now in effect and complications may ensue. All acts passed by the Legislature at its last session became laws at midnight Tuesday, so far as they do not conflict with constitutional provisions. The first of the new laws to cause trouble is that doing away with special judges and requiring the regular circuit judges to set where a judge is ill or disqualified. Gov. Willson is required under the new law to designate a regular judge who shall set in the place of disqualified officials. To designate judges who are not holding court at the time a vacancy occurs is what is puzzling the Governor. Another that hereafter juries shall pass new law is that which provides only on the guilt or innocence of the accused and shall not fix the time of punishment, neither is this fixed by the judge. The sentence of the prisoner to the pen for a term running the least and greatest term allowed by law. The prisoner may be paroled after serving the least term and if he is not paroled he will serve the longest term allowed by law. There is a question as to whether this law applies to the trial of prisoners for a crime committed in the past or whether it applies only to trials of crimes committed in the future. Winchester Democrat.

Regenstein's Ruling.

State Superintendent Regenstein has overruled certain interpretations of the law which are to be enforced. All teachers must be eighteen years old before they take the examination. It is not enough that they become 18 after the examination, but before beginning to teach. Heretofore the applicants have simply signed the oath required by law before taking the examination but now they must take the oath in person. Applicants can not take the examination in two counties and the papers graded in another, except State Normal pupils in counties where these schools are located. The County Superintendent must revoke the certificates of all teachers who fail to attend the session of the institute except for legal reasons. The law does not say he MAY revoke them but he MUST revoke them. In all districts having seventy-five or more pupils, all teachers principals and assistants must have first class certificates. Heretofore this has only applied to the principal teachers reporting more than one hundred children must have two first class teachers employed for the full term of six months.

Hot Fight in the Seventh.

The Seventh District Democratic Congressional primary election, which comes off next Saturday is the warmest that has been witnessed in Kentucky since that district retired W. C. P. Breckinridge as its representative in favor of W. C. Owens, J. C. Cantrill, of Scott County, the district's present congressman, and Claud M. Thomas, of Bourbon county are the candidates. Cantrill is fighting the Burley Tobacco Society, while Thomas is its candidate. Cantrill wants the 75 per cent clause in the pooler contract and declares he will not support it unless it is placed there. Twelve of the sixteen newspapers in the district are supporting Mr. Thomas, while only two are openly for Cantrill. The Burley Tobacco Society has several speakers in the field.

A Coincidence.

At Patriot four civil war veterans, Ben Addis, Harvey Wade, Ralph Pitt and John J. Houston, of whom serve in the same company, died on Thursday within a few hours of each other. The funerals of all are held at the same time Sunday—Lawrenceburg Press.

For a beginning O. P. Phipps has had good luck operating his auto in the Burlington and Erlanger mail line. He soon learned how to handle the machine, which is sure to become popular as a passenger conveyance between the above named points.

There Are Two Classes Says The Attorney-General.

Frankfort, June 16.—Attorney-General James Graham today sent to Mr. H. C. Riden, County Superintendent of Woodford County Schools, an opinion prepared by Assistant Attorney-General Thomas McCreary, in which he holds that there are two classes of county high schools in Kentucky, under the provisions of the Sullivan school bill.

One of the county high schools is that established by the County Board of Education and the other is that established by the school which the children attend under contract with the city school authorities; the county high school being located in the city and being also the city high school.

Poor Man in New Zealand.

In New Zealand any person desiring to own a farm can obtain land and a loan from the government sufficient to start him in business and maintain him till crops matured. By this liberal policy the heretofore unproductive lands have been rapidly settling up, and are becoming a source of revenue to the government, as well as making homes and a living for many thousands of good citizens. As the government owns and operates the railroads it furnishes free transportation to intending settlers, as well as to their children when necessary to reach schools at a distance. It also maintains a liberal policy, but at the same time is wise and business-like on the part of the government, making evenness of taxation, that was idle and unprofitable before. The government does even more than furnish the land, advance money to stock it and maintain the occupants for a year, it sends the farmer, if he is a beginner, to learn the business, of some competent person, that he may be able to conduct his own home stead with success. Nothing has been left undone to insure the prosperity of the people of that young province. If they are willing to cultivate the rich soil of the country, Uncle Sam may well pattern after the noble example of this liberal government of the islands in the Pacific. To do so would be to solve the vexing question of how to regulate the over-crowding of cities with its consequent want and misery.

Indictments Galore.

After being in session for ten days the Grand Jury reported Thursday morning returning the biggest batch of indictments ever returned by a Grant county grand jury. In all 113 indictments were returned, most of them being cases connected with the illegal sale of whiskey. Eight were for felonies and 105 for misdemeanors. That most of the indictments were returned against people who had received whiskey from the express office and had in their possession a U. S. Government license, it is hardly probable that many of these indictments will stand when it comes to trial, but it is generally conceded that it was necessary to go after all in order to get those who were conceded to be guilty. Grant County News.

Tobacco Selling in Carroll County.

Farmers have been delayed with their tobacco waiting on account of the lateness of plants, but the past week the nice rains have given them good seasons, and from the best of information gleaned from the crowd Monday we should judge that 80 or 85 per cent of the crop has been set, and everybody reported as starting off nicely, and that they believed the prospects this year were good for a big crop. Carrollton News.

Think Road Will Pay.

Those appointed to make investigation as to whether a road would pay from Frankfort to Owenton report that it will be a paying investment. With this assurance the committee will proceed to get the right of way. The clubs have been assured that the road can be built and will be financially a favorable report of right of way committee. The capitalist are from England, Philadelphia, and St. Paul, Minn. This sound like a sure way to get a road yet and "Barkis" is willing. Owen County Democrat.

Houston were the stars at the bat each hitting four home runs in five times at bat. The team will be greatly strengthened from now on, as Robt. Leasing, the star of the Newport Saturday Afternoon Church League, will don a Walton uniform next Saturday and will be with the Walton boys all season. TOBACCO CROP REPORT.

Most Of This Season's Acreage Now In The Field.

Showers Have Come At Opportunity Time and Plants

Have Made Fine Progress.

OUTLOOK IS PROMISING.

(By E. T. Roberts.)

Lexington, Ky., June 26.—In my last week's report I stated that "practically" all the crop was set, some papers jumped to the conclusion, by eliminating the word "practically." We were aware there was an unplanted percentage, but we felt that it was so unimportant and that everybody was ready, and that the amount of sunshine would deliver the plants and before next week's report this would be set, and in our surmise we were correct.

The largest crop in the State, J. B. Haggins' Elmford place, only had out 235 acres last week, and a remainder of 100 acres to plant, yet with this large area, and full percentage unplanted, was made complete by Wednesday night, as many other smaller planters.

We took in fair crops of Fayette, Woodford and Franklin counties overland this week, and while there are a few who have not planted every plant the purpose of the percentage remaining is too small to compute, and even these belated crops will doubtless be planted within 48 hours, for there is plenty of moisture to admit of it.

Showers have come in the most opportune time—Sunday night, the 26th, and again at the dawn of the week. These rains have covered the counties of Bourbon, Montgomery, Clark, Fayette, Woodford and Madison, and, no doubt have been pretty general.

The early planting has started off beautifully, corn and tobacco both have made remarkably fine progress the past week; the temperature was hot and forcing and as the ground was well underlaid with moisture, the growth was very rapid.

So far the crop starts off with a very promising outlook, and while the average farmer would be in distress in the event of a drought, something to grumble about, there has been nothing the past week to even give him an excuse, much less a cause for complaint.

There has been set a very fast pace here the past week, the heat of a political campaign in this district trying to excel the speed of the weather, the race is on, and the upward climb, but the race is off today, and politics retires for a season, at least, though wisecracks predict other than that, and the vote is counted, and that the political pot will be boiling until November next. We hope not, however, politics and business do not make profitable companions.

Eighty-Fifth Birthday.
On the 23d inst, Mr. Thomas P. Crisler, who makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. W. J. Rice near Burlington, passed the 85th mile post in his journey through life, but the occasion was not observed until the next day, when his two sons, Charles and Moberly, Missouri; Lewis and family, of Covington, and his granddaughter, Mrs. G. M. Terrill, of Lawrenceburg, were assembled at Mrs. Rice's, where a sumptuous dinner was enjoyed and a most delightful day was spent by the children and grand old man, for whose living therein the world has been benefited. Mr. Crisler has a great host of friends who wish for him many more happy birthdays.

Purchased A Fine Library.
Rev. Edgar Riley attended the sale of the personal estate of the late J. W. Rogers, of Walton, last Thursday, and became the purchaser of Roy Rogers' very fine library, one of the best private libraries in the State. It is said to consist of 1,500 to 2,000 volumes and was purchased for $315.

Jerry Blyth and Sidney Gaines made their first visit of the year to Gunpowder creek with pole line, last Saturday morning, but found the stream in no condition for the sport of entangling the finny monsters here because of a heavy run out of one tributary the night before.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(By Supt. Riley.)

All teachers and trustees are asked to have receipts in the hands of the Superintendent before July 1.

The Division Boards will meet Saturday of this week to select teachers for the coming session. The teachers' salaries for the year will be based on the following schedule: Teachers who have no experience begin with the salary of thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents ($37.50) per month. If they hold High School Diplomas at First Class High Schools or have done work in college equivalent to High School courses. Other inexperienced teachers begin with the salary of thirty dollars per month, except those inexperienced teachers holding first class certificates, who begin with the salary of thirty-two dollars and fifty cents. For each year taught the rate of salaries will increase two dollars and fifty cents per month and for each normal session attended an increase of two dollars per month is allowed, provided the session is not less than twelve weeks, the teacher passed the examination and that the sessions attended were in different years. Not more than two sessions will count as credit.

No school with a census report of less than 30 will be apportioned more than thirty-five dollars. No school holding certificates of the second or third grades shall receive more than forty dollars. The maximum salary of teachers will be forty-five dollars per month, except principals of two room schools, and those teachers who teach in districts receiving more than $5 in the census report shall receive five dollars more than would be allowed them provided no salary shall exceed fifty dollars. Districts receiving $5 or more pupils may receive as much as fifty dollars.

All contracts for teachers under the County Board of Education are subject to the above conditions.

The Common School Graduation Commencement will be held on Thursday, July 28. Each pupil will prepare an essay or declamation not longer than eight minutes and will be expected to read to the Superintendent at once.

Boone county is one of the few counties where no schools commence before September 1st. In communities where schools are, it would be well to commence schools in July or August.

Elections for trustees will be held in Divisions 1 and 4 this year. It is to be hoped that men or women will become candidates for these important places.

The Editor failed to find space for the schedule of salaries last week, but all contracts are subject to the conditions of this schedule.

Petitions from patrons for teachers should be sent to Division Boards. Patrons should petition for teachers when trustees are not teachers, and the people of a community are against.

The following teachers were selected last Saturday:

Division 1—
40. Nannie Hamilton, principal;
41. Ardelia Roberts, assistant.
42. Minnie Stephens.

It is to be that tobacco planted not later than the fourth day of July was reasonably certain to mature, but in those days the crop was not so certain and tobacco may have matured in less time than the Burley requires. Be that as it may the grower who now sows does not get his crop pitched by the 20th of June do not expect to make a good crop neither as to color nor pounds. The effort now is to get the crop out as soon as the plants are large enough.

The excessive heat last week resulted from the Centrifugal campaign for the Democratic congressional nomination up in the seventh district.

TRACTION LINE

Prospects Are Looking Brighter From Day To Day.

(Waraw Leader.)

It seems as though the dreams of Waraw and this beautiful Ohio valley of ours are about to be realized at last.

Many times the railroad question has been agitated and the people along the Ohio have almost fancied they heard the grinding of the wheels but each time the effort came to naught. This time steps have been taken by the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton Traction Co. to operate a line between Covington and Carrollton and their method of procedure and earnest efforts almost insure us that the road will be built and in operation before many months roll around.

The company, within the past ten days has been granted a franchise to operate through Covington and has posted liability and forfeiture bonds to the effect that the Railroad Company agrees to the forfeiture of $15,000 should the road not be completed in three years.

No school with a census report of less than 30 will be apportioned more than thirty-five dollars. No school holding certificates of the second or third grades shall receive more than forty dollars. The maximum salary of teachers will be forty-five dollars per month, except principals of two room schools, and those teachers who teach in districts receiving more than $5 in the census report shall receive five dollars more than would be allowed them provided no salary shall exceed fifty dollars.

Drouth Broken.

The rains that fell last Thursday and Friday in this county were badly needed by all the crops on which the hot sun had begun to have considerable effect. A light tobacco season resulted from the rain on Friday afternoon, and considerable tobacco was planted Saturday morning by those who had, and those who were able to secure plants, although it is very questionable if so late a planting will amount to enough to pay the planter for any time of labor. It is now reasonably certain that not to exceed eighty per cent of a crop will be housed in this county this fall and to reach that percentage all conditions must be favorable to the crop from now until it is housed.

THE OFFICIAL COUNT

Gives Rouse A Majority of Nineteen Hundred Twenty-Eight

The Democratic Congressional Committee met at Judge Quigley's in Covington, last Thursday, and counted the vote cast at the Congressional primary election held in this district on the 18th inst. The vote by counties was as follows:

Kenton	1743	Gooch	2344
Campbell	1215	Rouse	2344
Boone	380	Boone	212
Trimble	212	Boone	212
Carroll	286	Boone	212
Peston	314	Boone	212
Grant	463	Boone	212
Gallatin	182	Boone	212

Total 4763 687

Rouse majority 1928

Owing to the continued very serious illness of his mother, Mr. Rouse has not been able to meet any of his friends since the primary election. He has had time to answer all of the numerous congratulatory letters and telegrams received, but no candid ever more fully appreciated the loyalty of friends both at home and abroad, and as opportunities will he will testify to this affection fully. He realizes the responsibilities that will rest upon him both as a representative of the sixth district and as a Democrat, and will use every effort to meet fully every obligation as it presents itself.

Arthur B. Rouse, the Democratic nominee for Congress in the Sixth Kentucky District, will be, who elected, the youngest Congressman Kentucky has sent to Washington in many years. He has been the private secretary of Congressman John C. Breckinridge and was more recently secretary of the State Racing Commission. He is one of the brightest and ablest Democrats in the Commonwealth. When he gets to Washington he will be hailed as one of the youngest of the kind in the United States. His friends predict that he will not be there long until it will be generally known that he possesses a head full of sense and that he will go right to the heart of the matter in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

BASE BALL.

The Burlington High School ball team played two games with the Bellevue High School team here last Sunday and won each game by a large score. The Burlington team did not go to Bellevue Saturday afternoon, the game advertised being called off on account of the heavy rain. The team will play again Friday to secure a sufficient number of players.

Mystery Solved.

The mystery surrounding the discovery of the body of a boy with gold coins in the Dix River near King's Mill, in Boyle county, has been solved.

E. Flannery, of the oldest citizens of Danville, states that prior to the Civil War that section of Kentucky was infested with bank robbers, and that at that time and the robbers tracked by a posse to the Dix River cliffs, where the trail was lost. In later years a member of the gang on his death bed in Lexington, confessed to the act and stated that a box of coins occurred when the robbers in the Dix River at King's Mill.

Several searches were made since that time but to no avail. The box, found last week by George Keller, at that point contained several gold coins, and it is quite evident that the bed of the stream was the hiding place of many more shining shelds—Ex.

ADJUDGED INSANE.

Mrs. Martha A. Griffith Ordered Committed to Asylum at Lakeland.

(From Cincinnati Time-Star, June 16.)

For the second time, Mrs. Martha A. Griffith, wife of President Griffith of Walton, (Ky.) bank, was tried by a jury in Judge Tracy's court, Covington, Wednesday. On the previous trial, which was held at Burlington, she was acquitted. Wednesday, however, she was adjudged insane. Some time ago Mrs. Griffith caused a sensation by declaring that her husband was endeavoring to take $10,000 from her.

A divorce suit was filed by her in the Kenton Circuit court is still pending, according to the Cincinnati Time-Star. Mrs. Griffith has been confined in the Covington Hotel, at 429 Scott St. Covington, since the latter part of April. During that time, according to the testimony of Mrs. Ella Brande, proprietress, she has cashed checks for over $500 and it is not known what became of the money.

Cashier Ben Bramble of the Farmers and Traders National bank, testified that at one time she cashed a check for $340. Others testified in court that Mrs. Griffith consumed much whisky.

Dr. J. G. Furnish testified that the woman was suffering from paranoia. T. C. Crisler of Walton, Ky., police judge, also testified.

Mrs. Griffith was unable to be present in court Wednesday and the court appointed Attorney Fred W. Schmidt to represent her. Mr. Griffith was in court, but took no other part in the proceedings.

Shortly after 12 o'clock the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant insane and ordering her committed to the Lakeland asylum.

ANNUAL OUTING.

Kentucky Press Association Have A Delightful Time In The "Magic City."

The mid-summer meeting of the Kentucky Press Association held at Middletown, last week, will long be remembered by the press people as one of the most enjoyable in the history of the Association, made so by the lavish hospitality and generous entertainment displayed by the people of "The Magic City" and other points where the visitors were entertained.

Among those who were prominent in seeing that the visitors had a delightful time were W. Church Sleet, who was born and reared near Warsaw, and is now prospering in the insurance business at his adopted home; Col. Robert C. Ford, who formerly possessed the famous Kentucky Democrat, of which county he is a native. He has made good in every way in his new home.

Middletown has improved greatly and now has about 8,000 population. The coal industry is its principal support, though several large wholesale houses have been established to supply the trade of the two midland counties. The city has all the modern improvements and has an up-to-date air. The reception of the press people was hearty and genuine. The trip to the mines was enjoyed by all. The entire party was entertained with an elaborate luncheon by State Senator Daniel C. Swab at his beautiful bungalow, and then conducted through the coal mines by Jacob H. Keeny, formerly of Rising Sun, Ind., who is getting rich from his investments.

An inspection of the New South Brewery where a fine lunch was served was another enjoyable feature of the following day.

On Thursday the visitors were taken in carriages to Cumberland Gap, being driven over the best stretch of road in the State, built by the U. S. Government as a demonstration of what constitutes a truly good road.

The visitors climbed to the Pinnacle, a mountain top about 5,000 feet above sea level, and here a magnificent view of the entire State was obtained. The entire party was entertained with a fine dinner at the Pinnacle, and then returned to the hotel.

WAGE WAR ON THE SHARK

People of the Tropics Have Somewhat Cruel Way of Dealing with Detested Enemy.

For many years the question as to whether sharks will attack living human beings when in the water has been hotly debated by scientists, sportsmen and laymen in general.

Practically none of the divers lives in the tropics. Put the direct question to an inhabitant of tropical countries who lives on the seashore and he will unhesitatingly reply in the affirmative.

The average Panamanian would consider the question foolish. The bay on the Pacific side abounds in sharks, and none of the natives will ever take a swim in the deep waters of it. Some foreigners used to do so until one of the engineers working on the canal during the French regime, a young Colombian named Jules Patterson, was killed by a shark a number of years ago. When his body was recovered it had been almost entirely eaten.

This incident led to a war of reprisal on the sharks. Many of the natives are content with simply catching and killing them, but the favorite method is called "crucifying." The shark is hooked and drawn on deck, care being taken to see that he cannot use his terrible mouth for biting. He is laid down on boards and his fins securely nailed thereto in such a way that he cannot use them. The tail is then cut close off, and the unfortunate animal thrown overboard. He cannot swim and he cannot steer himself. He is helpless and the other members of his own family attack and devour him.

WANTED TO PURCHASE BABY

Small Girl Willing to Spend the Money, but Was on Lookout for a Bargain.

The shrewd small daughter of a clever Chicago business man not long since exemplified at once her faith in her father's judgment and her budding sense of commercial values. She and her brothers long had been clamoring for a sister, and the father, at Christmas time, had laughingly presented the mother with a generous check, explaining that she could buy a baby with it if she so desired. The children listened seriously, talked the matter over and decided that the dear mother had displayed unwelcome selfishness when, upon Christmas morning, she announced that she had purchased, not the longed-for little sister, but a diamond brooch. A little later Jennie, representing the juvenile members of the family, asked for a private word with her father and handed him three little bank books.

"Oscar and John and me have saved up our money," she explained, "until we've got $100.16 between us, and we want you to buy us a baby, if mother won't. An' daddy, you can have all this money to buy the baby with if you need it, but we thought maybe you'd watch the market and save out enough to get us this new swing we've been wanting so long."

DANGER IN LICKING STAMPS

Practice Has Been Known to Cause Acute Inflammation of the Tongue.

Do the people who fear at the cautious ones who refuse to lick a postage stamp as "cranks" know that there is a defined disease known as "the postage stamp tongue?"

This is an acute inflammation of the tongue, directly traced to the germs to be found on the gummed side of stamp or envelope.

Other and more serious diseases have been caused by this habit that is so universal and seems so harmless.

One throat specialist in a hospital declared that many chronic affections of the throat are found among persons who have as their livelihood the addressing and stamping of envelopes.

Bad skin diseases have been known to follow this habit, and it has even caused pulmonary troubles.

It is after all but a habit, and a bad one. It takes no more time and is quite as easy to moisten the stamp with a damp sponge or rag.

Where many letters must be stamped and sealed there are good patent inventions by which the sponge is kept moist.

Being Natural.

Can you, if you be the gentler sex, walk down the street behind an elegantly groomed woman and restrain the impulse to imitate her pose of head, her carriage and the fascinating ways she possesses? Have you ever been in a crowded room where one woman was the center of attraction, and seen someone trying to imitate her? A woman is most charming when she is natural. A woman who is natural, even in her erratic moods, does not give offense. One cannot imitate the ways, manners and style of another without appearing ridiculous. The nicest women we meet are those who do not pose or seek to imitate some one else.

Her Fruitless Search.

Mrs. Slimdick: "You are not eating your meat, Mr. Hallroom."

New Boarder: "Er—the fact is, Mrs. Slimdick, my teeth are not very good, and this meat seems a little tough to me."

Mrs. Slimdick: "Well, that's too bad. Such a time as I do have getting good meat. I have tried every place I can think of."

Mr. Hallroom: "Have you tried the place over there?"

SAT IN VICTORIA'S PRESENCE

But Two Men, Calling as Official Business, Have Been Known to Do So.

Few men were ever allowed to sit in the presence of Queen Victoria—in fact, it is said that probably not more than two ever enjoyed that privilege when they called formally or on official business, and these two were Gladstone and Sir James Alexander Grant, M. D. of Ottawa. During one of his journeys to England he was called to the royal palace to see the queen, who was not in very good health.

The visitor was ushered into the presence of her majesty, who was seated. Unfortunately for the distinguished politician, it was a little difficult for him to hear and understand his hostess, so he went nearer and drew a stool close by her side and seated himself upon it, thus being able to hear her voice perfectly. It was an unconventional act in a royal presence and many of the lords turned up their noses. But after a few minutes the queen apologized later and explained why he had sat down before England's queen.

OUR FEAR OF CONSEQUENCES

Writer Thinks It Deters Us from the Commitment of Good as Well as Bad Acts.

Perhaps the fear of consequences keeps us from doing all that we are convinced that it also deters us from many good ones. It keeps us from being as disagreeable to people as we should sometimes like to be, but it also prevents us from being as nice to them as we now and then have the impulse to be.

I often think of this as I stand beside the track in the country and watch a train rush past. The engineer is usually leaning out of his window. I wave to him, he waves back, we smile in most friendly fashion, and the train flashes by. I am the better for the greeting, and I hope he is. Once I stood on a bridge and watched a slow freight creep along under me. The train man stood or lay on the tops of the cars, and as they passed they tossed salutations up to me. I caught them all. It was great fun. But afterwards I reflected, what would have happened, if that freight had suddenly stopped under the bridge, as freights sometimes do, or if the engine had blown out a cylinder or something, so that the turbulence of the moment threatened to be prolonged for an hour or two? I fancy all those genial men would have suddenly stiffened into solid automata, and I should have had a pressing engagement elsewhere.—Atlantic.

The Beet as Food.

The beet is the one of the most valuable of cultivated plants. The sugar beet is a main source of sugar and alcohol. The large forage beet supply an excellent food for cattle and the red garden varieties provide savory table vegetables. The usefulness of this valuable food has now been increased by the production of an edible flour from sugar beets. The desiccation of sliced sugar beets is practiced in Germany on an extensive scale, but the product is employed exclusively as fodder for cattle. In Belgium, however, it is made from dried beets. It is entirely new and the distinctive flavor of the beet and is suitable for cakes, puddings and pastry. As it contains about 65 per cent of sugar it can often be substituted with advantage for sugar in somewhat larger quantities.

The processes of desiccation and grinding not only cost less than the extraction of sugar, but preserve all the sugar of the beet, part of which is rejected in the form of molasses in the process of sugar making.

Not in Stock.

A Boston sportsman, who has just returned from the Maine woods, tells of an incident which happened in one of the small country stores in the Pine Tree state. Laid up with a cold one day, and consequently forced to remain indoors, the hunter went to the village store in search of something to read. Robert Browning he held as his favorite author, so he promptly asked the rather elderly shopkeeper to look over his shelves and see if he had Browning's works among a small array of books tucked away in an obscure corner.

"None," replied the storeman, running over his shelves; "we've got blueing, blacking and whitening, but I don't see do browsing anywhere."

Bananas.

Fruit men say that one of the big troubles with bananas is that of the "peebroom." They keep up a too high temperature until the desired yellow color comes to the skin without bringing any sweetness or ripeness in the meat of the fruit. In this shape bananas are almost exactly like the plantains that are cooked in the tropics, and as raw food. This quick ripening not only saves a lot of time and expense in turning money over quicker—but the bananas are firmer and harder, stand shipment better, and can be pulled greater than the old style, regularly ripened banana.—New York Press.

For the Scandalmonger.

The Orleans museum has just been enriched with a curious relic of the past which some workmen in making excavations in the city came across. It is a stone representing a grinning figure, showing the teeth, the countenance being repellent enough. In this way the loquacious woman, the scandalmonger, was brought to her senses. The stone, suspended by a chain, was placed round her neck, and so accoutred she was compelled to walk round the town in which she lived. The stone is supposed to date about the sixteenth century.

A NEW PROPOSITION.

POOL THE LAND INSTEAD OF THE TOBACCO.

This Plan if Carried Out Would Enable the Farmer to Control the Price of Everything.

T. V. Rogers, of Scott county, proposes the following as a solution for the tobacco pooling question. He says:

"Feeling that I have a proposition, which, if adopted, will forever solve the pooling question. I beg to submit it to you, for your careful consideration. Pool the farms in the Burley District instead of pooling the tobacco. When you pool your farms let it be understood that the farms are pooled for all time, or as long as tobacco is grown for market. Let it be further understood that the pool is not to be closed until eighty-five per cent. of the farms of the district are pooled."

"On the first day of October of each year declare the per cent. of farms in district pooled; if there are not eighty-five per cent. pooled at said date, then every grower is at liberty to sell his tobacco to whom, for what, and when he pleases. Let it be further understood that no farmer is compelled to raise tobacco because his farm is pooled but if he does raise tobacco, raise it on his farm, this tobacco is pooled, by virtue of the fact of the farm being pooled."

"Let it be further understood that no member of the Board of Control of this organization can become a candidate for any political office."

"Every member is at liberty to affiliate with any political party he pleases, but he must not by his acts or words attempt to commit this organization to any political candidate party or measure. This organization shall have but one object in view, that is to place the farmer in the position where he will not only have the privilege, but the power to price what he raises."

"I believe if eighty-five per cent. of farms in the Burley District could be pooled this year, it would sell the 1909 crop, now pooled, and all other crops of tobacco that may be raised in this district. Not only so, but this plan if followed will eventually enable the farmer to control the price of everything he raises, and this without the requisition of the shot gun, horse whip or the fire brand."

SOUNDS FISHY.

Two Horses Required to Haul The Fish Caught By Two Vevey, Indiana, Fishermen.

Two Vevey, Indiana fishermen caught more fish one day last week than was ever before taken at one time from southern Indiana waters. Concerning the big haul the Vevey Review says:

"Rudolph and Ab Brown, residents of this city, made the biggest haul of fish ever caught in this community on Tuesday morning when they, by use of a wing net, secured about 800 pounds of German carp out of Schenck's pond. The rapid rise of the river last week brought the water up into the places in the creek near the pond where it has not been for months, the fish passing through a narrow net into a miniature lake which was formed. The Brown Bros. stretched the wing net across the inlet and waited for their trouble by catching all the fish in the pond when the river receded. It required the services of a two horse wagon to haul them to Vevey where they were dressed and readily sold at good figures. Some of the fish weighed as much as 30 or 40 pounds apiece and there were very few small ones in the lot."

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood, give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth velvety skin, lovely complexion, and good health. Try them. 50c at Bentler's drug store, Brainerd.

Narrow Escape.

Logan Gaines, Jr., son of Perry B. Gaines, had a narrow escape for his life last Saturday. He went into a stall to untie a young mule, when the animal kicked him in the head, making a terrible wound, but did not render him unconscious. The animal began to paw him, and he rolled himself under the manger, where he remained until his father came to his assistance. He was considerably bruised also.—Car.

In the Democratic primary in the Sixth Kentucky district on Saturday A. B. Rouse of Boone county won over D. Lian Gooch of Kenton county by a majority approximating 200. He carried seven of the eight counties in the district, beating Gooch in the latter's own county by more than 80 votes. Rouse is a nephew of Harry Blyth of this city, his mother being a sister of Mr. Blyth. He is a young man of sterling integrity, a graduate of Hanover college, and a member of the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity.—Lawrenceburg Register.

Make Every Acre Produce.

There is a greater need at the present time to make every acre of land produce its maximum yield than ever before. This is so for many reasons. Land has become so high priced that it necessarily must be made to produce more, to make milling the soil profitable. The average of productive land in comparison with growing population is rapidly diminishing. The farmer who has a hard time of it is a living illustration of the fact that a farm can hardly expect the growing members to obtain a living from the same farm by the same methods he employed.

For a time there was good land in the Western States which was obtainable. Such land is scarce now, and some of our homeseekers are going to Western Canada and into Mexico for new homes. Scientific methods of farming have been worked out, and are now employed by the most progressive class of farmers. This has solved the problem, and larger production on the same area is the strong trend of present conditions.

The Department of Agriculture and agricultural stations of the states have spent vast sums of money on their experiments, and agricultural schools that have meant more for the welfare, not only of agriculture but of the whole nation.

Under the direction of the experiment stations, and the instruction from the agricultural colleges, farmers learn intensive methods of culture and grow more on less acreage. The land which they tend must be cared for in the best possible manner. They select and test their seed before it is planted. They make sure that if it will not grow well they will not waste their land on it. After the seed is planted they care for it until a greater yield is produced than would otherwise be the case.

Modern farm machinery is adapted to better caring for the crops. Much of the modern agriculture progress is due to the efficient care that it is possible to give crops with the improved farm machinery. This is not only true, but a vast amount of labor can be saved.

Refuses to Draw Warrants.

Warrants for $40,000, appropriated at the last session of the legislature for improvement and maintenance for the Blind, at Louisville, will not be drawn at one time, as demanded by the board of visitors, unless Auditor James is so instructed by the courts. The legislature passed a bill, approved by Gov. Wilson, providing for the issuance of warrants for the institution, payable in 12, 18, and 24 months, of $10,000 each. Auditor James has come to the conclusion that the legislature meant that the first warrant of $10,000 should be paid at the end of six months, the second at the end of 12 months, and so on. He does not believe that the legislature intended to make an appropriation of $40,000, on which a fifth of it would be paid out in interest, as would be the case if the warrants were all issued at once and discounted.

Spare the Screech Owl.

It is not generally known that the screech owl is a sworn enemy of the English sparrow, and for that reason should be protected, as it is constantly at war with the pestiferous sparrow. We have noticed several violent deaths in the owl family of late, and are consequently moved to these remarks. In all the birds of the field, the sparrow does most damage to the fruit and crops, and his extermination is a consumption to be devoutly desired. The owl works overtime on the sparrows' trail, and should be aided instead of hindered in his praiseworthy appetite. Therefore keep hands off and let him alone. May he not grow weary in well doing.—Jasmine News.

Handsome and Convenient.

In the next few days W. P. Sandford and family will occupy their new residence which will occupy the site of the one destroyed by fire near Ft. Mitchell, Kenton county, several months ago. While the new home will not be so roomy as the old one it will be equipped with all the modern conveniences, such as water, furnace heat, electric light, etc., making a delightful abode for Mr. and Mrs. Sandford in their declining days.

Members of the Kentucky Press Association, who had their outing at Middleboro last week, are of the opinion that if there is anything that one wants and cannot get that thing can be supplied readily in Middleboro. The editors and their families had the time of their lives. Everywhere they went they were accompanied by a brass band, and at regular intervals during the day great platters of fried chicken and turkey ham were served at them from all sides. Special trains were at their disposal and the schedule of the Mountain League of baseball teams was changed to suit their convenience. The newspaper men were whirled through coal mines and waterfalls, and they walked by their hosts. They walked in the paths made by Daniel Boone through Cumberland Gap and climbed to the peaks of the mountains. It was pointed out that it was possible for them to see seven states. Some of the editors say they saw even more than that. The people of Middleboro raised a fund of money with which to entertain their visitors, and the newspaper men from the Pennsylvania, the noted state and the Blue Grass say that they came home feeling that the mountains make up about the best part of the state.

Farm Notes.

This hot weather is rapidly ripening the wheat, and in a few days the reaper will be heard all over Central Kentucky.—Winchester Democrat.

The time for setting tobacco has passed and the crop of 1910 is on the hill. When the acreage, condition, size of plants and location in setting is considered, the prospect is for a big crop of low grade.—Winchester Democrat.

About 900 export cattle, weighing 1,450 to 1,500 pounds were sold last week in Montgomery county for August and September delivery at 7 cents per pound. Many owners refused this price and expect to get eight cents.—Ex.

Justice John W. Coleman sold and delivered to Jonas Well being worth $4,000 and $5,000 worth of export cattle. The consignment consisted of 40 head, weighing 310 pounds each, and the price was 6 3/4 cents a pound. These cattle were fattened on Lexington, not being grazed at all.—Lexington Leader.

The late spring and excessive rains followed by the present dry weather, has greatly retarded the growth of all kinds of vegetation and it appears at this time that all crops will be short. Meadows are practically worthless in this section of the State, being taken by weeds and white top, corn is generally a yellow unhealthy crop, while many farmers have not half planted the proposed crop of tobacco, and it is now the 33d day of June. A wonderful cry of discouragement is heard many times a day.—Grant County News.

Miss Alice Buckner is among relatives and friends at this place from Georgetown to spend her vacation.

One of the most interesting June weddings was that of Miss Maybelle Tanner, to Mr. Furbush Underhill on the 18 inst. at 5 p. m., within the sacred walls of the Erlanger Baptist church. The pretty little chapel was appropriately decorated in white and yellow, and filled with anxious, expectant friends awaiting the coming of the bride, when the strains of the wedding march announced the approach of the bridal party.

Up the right aisle came the bride, Miss Maybelle Tanner, in a white gown, and followed by the bridesmaids, of honor, becomingly gowned in yellow, followed by the little ring bearer, Miss Furbush Underhill. The bride, leaning on the arm of her brother, Mr. Lenard Tanner, looking radiant in all her girlish loveliness, was escorted to the altar by Mr. Furbush Underhill, who, as the groom, took his bride and led her forth with a smile bespeaking victory and satisfaction. The ceremony was followed by a wedding breakfast at the home of the bride's mother, to immediate friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Underhill were recipients of numerous and valuable presents from friends, attesting their good will and well wishes for their future happiness. Ushers at the church were Messrs. Miles Smith, Henry Childress, Phillip Tallafiero, Russell Victor. Guests from afar were Mrs. Susan Hubble, Mrs. Bigney and daughter, of Moore's Hill, Indiana; Mr. Tice Connelly, of Evansville, Ohio.

RIVER VIEW.

William Wingate is in very bad health. Several finished setting tobacco, last Saturday.

Mrs. Sallie Stephens was sick several days last week.

Joe VanNest is at work in a tobacco house at Sanders.

Sunday was the warmest day of the year, the thermometer registering 104 at one time.

O. Ryle, of Covington, was a guest of Ernest Ryle and family, Friday and Friday night.

Bolivia Shinkle and wife, of East Bend, were guests of Alf Wingate and wife, of this place, last Sunday.

Mrs. William Hahn and little son of Covington, Indiana, are visiting the former's father, William Wingate, of Riverview.

Misses Viola and Mamie Clore and Anabel Ryle were pleasantly entertained by Miss Ruth Kelly of Locust Grove, last Thursday.

Everyone here was busy, Saturday, setting tobacco, which was nearly as much of a job with some as was the first setting.

Whitlock's new Hoosier Boy with a new carpet for the church, was launched at Rising Sun last Wednesday. She can sure go some.

Quite a number of our citizens attended the Christian church festival at Bellevue, Saturday night and all pronounce it quite a success socially and financially.

Frank Scott, our efficient road overseer, has broken quite a lot of stone on the road from Rabbit H to Middle creek. A great deal of money will be saved by those who travel the road in rainy weather.

The Ladies' Aid Society bazaar at Rabbit Hash, last Saturday, was a success in every way. The Society made bonnets and aprons and other small articles they put on sale. Ice cream was served and they cleared quite a neat sum for the church.

The festival given for the benefit of East Bend Baptist church at J. H. Walton's, Saturday night, was a success in every way. The ice cream was delicious and the cakes ditto. About thirty dollars was cleared to be used for paper and a new carpet for the church.

Riverview has the string when it comes to freak chickens. Mrs. Alf Wingate has a chicken that is four days old, that is perfectly formed every way, excepting that it has no eyes, its motion as it moves resembles that of a snake being bled, and which is heard on the ground. Its head moves from side to side with a motion peculiar to snakes. A chicken owned by the writer has four perfectly formed wings, one pair being on its thighs.

While in Rabbit Hash, last Saturday afternoon, we enjoyed our first ride in the trim little ferry craft, Hask Hopkins, with Capt. Ben and Jerome Wilson in command. This little boat can make a round trip while you are going one way in a skiff. Once over the river, we visited the shipyard where the fine new ferry boat is being built, and which is nearing completion. This boat will be a sidewheeler, with gasoline power furnished by two twenty horsepower Buffalo engines the same make as those in the famous racer, Hoosier Boy, and when completed she will be the fastest and best equipped ferry boat between Cincinnati and Louisville, and with two such careful and accommodating men in charge, the service at this point will be perfect.

that morning he had mowed the lawn at his house and on going into his home complained of feeling ill and had a faint vomiting. Dr. A. N. Jones was summoned and administered remedies to relieve him. Shortly afterwards Dr. Jones was recalled but before he reached the bedside the spirit of Rev. Buck had passed to its eternal home. Heart failure is supposed to be the cause. Rev. Buck was universally beloved by all of our people and the news of his death struck everyone with sorrow of the most poignant nature. He was born at Abington, Virginia, fifty-five years ago last January and came to Kentucky about eighteen years ago, taking charge of the Christian church at Carrollton and becoming one of its most polished and convincing preachers. He was a man of high intellectual attainments, and a very gifted speaker, and he was beloved and esteemed wherever he was known. He was married to Miss Susan Shelburn of Virginia, and their union was blessed with four children, Frank R. Buck, of Chicago, David S. Buck and Ernest Buck of Philadelphia, Pa., and Miss Fannie Mae Buck who makes her home at Walton.

The mother died in 1894 at Carrollton. Rev. Buck's second marriage was to Miss Lina Tandy of Carroll county, who survives him. He was a most genial, kind, polished gentleman, and very devoted to his wife and children and the bond of affection could not have been stronger in any family, and his death naturally fell with heavier force on the hearts of those he loved so dearly. Rev. Buck was pastor of the Walton Christian church some years ago, and he had charge of the Christian churches at Crittenden, Dry Ridge and Corinth. Everywhere he was esteemed for his splendid work in the church, and he will be greatly missed, both in the church and in this community. He was the Vice-President of the Buck & Snodgrass Lumber Company of Johnson City, Tennessee, and his two sons D. S. and Ernest represented the Company's interests at Philadelphia, and his son Frank was engaged in the lumber business at Chicago. All of the children arrived home in time to attend the funeral which took place Tuesday morning, the remains being taken to Carrollton on the train where religious services were held. Rev. H. W. Elliott, of Sulphur, delivering the eulogy to the memory of the deceased, after which the interment took place in the Odd-Fellows cemetery along side of those of his first wife. There was a very large attendance at the funeral to attest their high esteem of the deceased and the earnest work of his thirty-one years in the ministry here. The family desire to express their heartfelt appreciation of the sympathy and kindness shown them in this trying hour.

J. C. Cantrill, present Congressman in the seventh district, was nominated last Saturday by the Democrats for reelection, this fall by a majority of about three thousand over his opponent, Claud M. Thomas, of Bourbon county. Mr. Thomas was backed by the Burley Tobacco Society, which, two years ago, nominated Cantrill over Kimball, who sought a nomination for a reelection, but the Tobacco Society having lost its potency as a factor in politics in the seventh district could not land Thomas a winner, and by its activity in the primary campaign many think it has about put itself out of business. Cantrill stands pledged to compel the Burley tobacco growers to make a complete statement of all its transactions as such, many of which he charges have been traced upon the growers, whose tobacco it has hoarded. Consequently the troubles of the Burley Society have just begun if Cantrill is able to sustain the charge he has made, and if he fails or refuses so to do he will stand self convicted as a political demagogue of the worst type. Consequently he is yet engaged in a real and a most momentous conflict that will be closely watched the country over. It will be a fight to the finish.

Rev. Miles Smith, of Erlanger, preached at Sand Run last Sunday to an attentive congregation that was very much pleased with his sermon. He supplied the pulpit for the pastor, Rev. Brooks, who has been very much indisposed for several days.

Mr. and Mrs. Henao and son, of Cincinnati, A. Caking and daughter, Miss Alice and Miss Marie Griffith, of Ludlow, Miss Marie Menke, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Menke, of Loveland, Ohio, were guests of Mrs. Carrie Menke at her country home near Walton last Sunday, and all spent a delightful day. Miss Marie Menke will remain for a visit until after the fourth.

Mrs. John S. Matson and two children, Miss Eleanor and Thomas Dickey, of Richmond, were visitors to their manse here Saturday. Mrs. Matson is gradually recovering from the terrible shock sustained by the death of her beloved husband whose death occurred a couple of months ago, and is still greatly deplored by the many warm friends of the manse here.

The Union League of Christian Endeavor will hold its usual meeting at the Baptist church, Saturday evening, July 23, at 8:30 o'clock, at which time the following program will be rendered: Leader, Miss Queen Tillman; subject, Truthfulness; essay, Mrs. Kate Kinsler; essay, Miss Zula Mayhugh; song; essay, Miss Louise Lathrop; talks, Chas. Kinsler and Clifford Sanders; Misses Elizabeth Hicks and Mary Houston.

The sale of the personal effects of the late James W. Rogers, last Thursday, was largely attended. The bidding was spirited, and the prices realized were fully up to the expectations. Rev. Edgar C. Riley of Burlington purchased the large and valuable library for $315, and Mrs. Robert Conrad bought the house and lot for $1,275. J. M. Elliston, of Elliston, was the administrator, and J. F. Dougan, the auctioneer and Roy D. Stamler officiated as the clerk of the sale.

Dr. S. N. Harover, of Mayesville, was here last week enroute to Big Bone Springs, where he has an interest in some real estate. Since the prospect of the traction railway being built from Covington to Big Bone Springs, as proposed by the late Hon. Albert S. Berry, Dr. Harover has intended to build a sanitarium at Big Bone Springs, as soon as the line is ready for travel, and now with renewed prospects he is getting ready for some positive action if the development materializes.

Friday afternoon during the severe storm in this quarter lightning struck the barns of Mart Richardson and R. C. Stephenson, situated in Kenton county, near Walton, and both buildings were totally destroyed. Mr. Richardson's barn contained a lot of farm implements, and the loss will be about $1,200. Mr. Stephenson's barn contained about 40 tons of hay, and other valuables, and his loss will be about $2,000 on the Kenton County Assessment Company. Considerable damage was done by the washing rain.

Mrs. Lora Willis, of Cincinnati, was granted an absolute divorce and restored to her maiden name, Lora Diers, in the divorce court in Cincinnati. Her husband, Edward U. S. A. Willis, is a railroad engineer and is now in Missouri. They were married about ten years ago. Failure to provide and support were the grounds on which the divorce was granted. Mr. Willis was formerly an engineer on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad. Mrs. Willis is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Diers and is a lady esteemed by everybody by whom she is known, and there is no question but that she did more than her part to make her marriage a success and her husband a true and devoted helper.

Wednesday, June 22d, a very beautiful and happy wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Poor, when their only daughter, Miss Carrie, was given in marriage to Edward A. Willis, of Indianapolis, Ind., in the presence of about seventy guests. Promptly at the appointed hour, at 4:30 p. m., the wedding march from Lohengrin played on the piano by Miss Webster, a cousin of the bride, announced the approach of the happy young couple who were ushered into the parlor in the presence of the assembled guests. The bride, a very beautiful young woman, was escorted by the best of friends, Campbell of the M. B. church, bound the two young lives in the happy estate of matrimony. The bride appeared most charmingly in white embroidered millie, trimmed with rich point lace, and carrying a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley. The groom wore the conventional black. Following congratulatory remarks to the wedding room where a wedding feast of unusual excellence was served. Mr. and Mrs. Willis were recipients of many beautiful presents. They left for a honeymoon trip to Niagara Falls, Alaska and other points of interest. They will be accompanied at Indianapolis, where Mr. Willis has prepared a beautiful home for his bride. Mr. Willis is a son of the late Mr. C. L. and D. A. Willis, and is a gentleman of wide standing. The bride is one of the most excellent young ladies of the city. They will be a couple of women that make her a man, and she will be a helpmate to the husband. The most of friends and friends heartily wishes to the couple for a long and happy life together.

Ex-Senator James B. McCreary, has signified his willingness to become a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Kentucky. He has a strong following in every part of the State, but the machine, which just about names the candidates in Kentucky are for another fellow, and unless the people prove stronger than the machine, in which they have failed for several years, McCreary will be thrown down as he was not long since. Unless he is willing to take the field and make a fight for the nomination, the probability is he will not be in it a little bit, although he is about the only man in the Democratic party in Kentucky, who has all the attributes of an ideal governor.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon each other in the grounds of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outcast with political influence. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore, successor of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are friends to all the others, while the latter are mis-true to each other. Both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold's men capture Appleweight. Jerry Dangerefield dis- covers the capital and leads him to Ar- dmore, her own prisoner. Griswold and Ar- dmore explore the scene of the disappear- ance and meet Ardmore and Jerry. Gris- wold refuses to recognize his friend.

Griswold's companion spoke to him earnestly in a low tone for a moment, and then Griswold addressed Ardmore facetiously.

"I don't know what you pretend to be, sir; but it may interest you to know that I am the governor of South Carolina."

"And this gentleman," cried Jerry, pointing to Ardmore with his riding- crop, "though his hair is mussed and his heart visibly unkind, is none other than the governor of North Carolina, and he is not only on his own prop- erty, but in the sovereign state of which he is the chief executive."

Prof. Griswold lifted his hat with the least flourish.

"I congratulate the state of North Carolina on having reposed authority in hands so capable. If this young lady is correct, sir, I will serve official no- tice on you that I have reason to be- lieve that a person named Apple- weight, a fugitive from justice, is hiding on your property and in your state, and I now formally demand that you surrender him forthwith."

"If I may introduce myself," inter- posed Jerry, "I would say to you that my name is Geraldine Dangerefield, and that this Appleweight person is now at Mr. Ardmore's house."

"I suppose," replied Miss Osborne with gentle irony, "that he has the pick parlor and leads the conversa- tion at table."

"You are quite mistaken," replied Ardmore; "but if it would afford you any satisfaction to see the outlaw you may look upon him in my wine cellar, where, only an hour ago, I let him sit down on a case in Chateau Biset '82. My further intentions touching this wondrously South Carolinian I need not now disclose; but I give you warn- ing that the Appleweight issue will soon and forever be terminated and in a manner that will greatly redound to the credit and the glory of the Old North State."

"I trust," said Griswold, "that the prisoner, whom we cannot for a moment concede to be the real Apple- weight, will not be exposed to scarlet fever, pending a settlement of this matter. And now, I have the honor to bid you both good morning."

He and Barbara swung their horses round and retraced their way, leav- ing Ardmore and Jerry gazing after them.

When the shabby beast from the stable at Turner Court House had borne Miss Osborne and Griswold out of sight beyond the bungalow, Ar- dmore turned blankly to Jerry.

"Have I gone blind or anything? Unless I'm crazy that was dear old Grissy, but who is that girl?"

"That is Miss Barbara Osborne, and I hope she has learned such a lesson that she will not be snippy to me any more. If she is the present governess of the Daughters of the Seminole War."

"But where do you suppose she found Grissy?"

"I don't know, I'm sure; nor, Mr. Ardmore, do I care."

"He said he represented the state of South Carolina—do you suppose the governor has really employed him?"

"I do not," said Jerry emphatically; "for he appears intelligent, and intel- ligence is something that would never appeal to Gov. Osborne. It is quite possible," mused Jerry aloud, "that Miss Osborne's father has disappeared, and she is running his of- fice with Mr. Griswold's aid. If so, we shall probably have some fun be- fore we get through with this."

"If that's true we shall have more than that," exclaimed Ardmore, thor- oughly aroused. "You don't know Grissy. How the smartest man alive has been running this Appleweight business. Gov. Osborne, he'll keep as busy as a bee."

"Remember, Mr. Ar- dmore, that I have seen oppor- tunity to see him. I don't think I shall be able to do so."

son and to the honor of the Old North State."

"I have no intention of failing, Miss Dangerefield; and with this they turned and rode slowly back toward the house."

Prof. Griswold, and Miss Osborne were silent until the forest again shut them in.

Then, in a sequestered spot, Gris- wold suddenly threw up his head and laughed loud and long.

"Do you suppose they really have Appleweight?" asked Barbara.

"Not for a minute! They told us that story merely to annoy us when they found what we were looking for. That touch about the wine cellar is characteristically Ardmoreque. If they had Appleweight you may be sure they wouldn't keep him on the premises."

Whereupon they rode back to Turn- ner Court House much faster than they had come.

CHAPTER XV.

The Prisoner in the Corn-Crib.

Jerry and Ardmore sat at a long table in the commodious Ardley li- brary, which was a subscription to a clipping bureau, and they had been examining critically a batch of cuttings relating to the New Orleans incident.

"It's a good thing we got hold of Collins," observed Ardmore, putting down a clipping from a New York paper in which the reports of Gov. Dangerefield's disappearance were an- nounced and tersely dismissed; "for he knows how to write and he's done a splendid picture of your father on his throne attending to business; and his little stingers for Osborne are the work of a genius."

"There's a certain finish about Mr. Collins' lying that is refreshing," re- plied Jerry, "and I cannot help think- ing that he has a brilliant future be- fore him if he enters politics. Noth- ing pains me more than a careless, ill-considered, silly lie, which is the best that most people can do. But it would be very interesting to know whether Gov. Osborne has really dis- appeared, or just how your friend the Virginia professor has seized the reins of state. Do you suppose he got a jug from somewhere, and met Miss Osborne and—"

"Do you think—do you think—she may have—possibly closed one eye in his direction?" asked Ardmore dubiously.

"Mr. Ardmore," and Jerry pointed at him with a bronze paper-cutter to make sure of his attention—"Mr. Ar- dmore, if you ever imply again by act, word or deed that I winked at you I shall never speak to you again. I should think that a man who— sister like Mrs. Atchison would have a better opinion of women than you seem to have. I never saw you until you came to my father's house to tell me about the jug—and you know I didn't. And as for that Barbara Os- borne—"

"Do You Suppose They Really Have Appleweight?"

borne, while I don't doubt that even in South Carolina a Daughter of the Seminole War might wink at a gen- tleman in a moment of extreme pro- vocation. I doubt if she did, for she lacks animation, and has no more soul than a gum overshoe."

The discussion ceased abruptly on the appearance of Big Paul, the for- easter.

"A body of South Carolina militia is marching across country from the south. One of my men heard of it last night, and has no more soul than a gum overshoe."

"The discussion ceased abruptly on the appearance of Big Paul, the for- easter."

"Bully for old Grissy!" exclaimed Ardmore. "They're coming this way, are they?"

"The three bent over the map."

"This is the place sir. They seem to be planning to get around Turner's without stirring up the town. But it would take a good deal to wake up Turner's," laughed the big German.

Jerry placed his finger on the state line.

"If they dare cross that—if they as much as dare!"

"If they dare we shall show them a few things. Take all the men you need, Paul, to watch their movements. That will do."

these Appleweight fellows had been cutting off the timber down there, if I remember rightly."

"Yes, sir," replied the forester, twining his cap awkwardly. "But some of the people on the estate have said—"

He broke off in an embarrassment so unlike him that Jerry and Ardmore looked at him curiously.

"Well, Paul, what's the matter? If the cabin has been burned down it's no serious matter."

"Why, sir; some of the men passing there at night say they see lights and hear sounds in the cabin, though no one from the estate goes there. A child died in the house last spring and—well, you know how some of these people are!"

"Cheer up, Paul. We have bigger business on hand than the chasing of ghosts just now. When we get through with these other things I'll go over there myself and take a look at the spook."

As Paul laughed away, Jerry seized a pen and wrote this message:

Rutherford Gilligwater.
Adjutant-General, Camp Dangerefield, Asheville, N. C.

Have all available troops by shortest route to Kildare at once, and report to me personally at Ardley. Make no state- ments to newspapers. Answer.

"I guess that will bring him run- ning," said Ardmore, calling a ser- vant and ordering the message dis- patched immediately.

Before luncheon a message was re- ceived from Gilligwater, to this ef- fect:

Gov. William Dangerefield, N. C.
Ardsley, N. C.

En route with our entire available force in the field. I am riding ahead with all speed, and will report at Ardley at nine o'clock. Is full military dress required?

Gilligwater, Adjutant-General.

"Isn't that just like Rutherford! He's afraid he won't be dressed enough; but if he knew that the South Carolina troops might shoot holes in his uniform he wouldn't be so here for a couple of weeks, instead of at nine o'clock," and Jerry laughed merrily.

They debated more seriously this telegram from Collins at Raleigh sent the previous evening:

"Things are certainly growing more exciting," was Ardmore's comment. "I suppose even a gifted liar like Col- lins can't muzzle the press forever."

"You can't go on fooling all North Carolina all the time, either," said Jerry, "and I suppose when papa gets tired of being scared he will turn up in Raleigh and tell some plausible story about where he has been and what has happened. When it comes to being plausible no one can touch papa."

"Maybe he's dead," suggested Ar- dmore gloomily.

"That's a real inspiration on your part, Mr. Ardmore; and it's very sweet of you to mention it, but I have no idea that any harm has come to papa. It's too much trouble to get elected governor, without trying in office, and besides, papa is none too friendly with the lieutenant governor and would never think of allowing such a person to succeed him. But these bonds seem very serious and I don't like the idea of your Mr. Billings making a fuss at Raleigh."

"That will be all right," remarked Ardmore, blotting the last of a num- ber of telegrams which he had been writing, and pressing a button. "It's much more important for us to get Appleweight into a South Carolina jail; and it's not going to be so easy to do, now that Grissy is working on the other side, and angry at me about that scarlet fever telegram."

"There may be trouble," said Ar- dmore to his guests, as they sat at luncheon. "But I should hate to have it said that my guests could not be taken care of here perfectly. I beg that you will all remain."

The luncheon was interrupted by the arrival of a summons for Ar- dmore, who hurriedly left the table. Big Paul awaited him below, mount- ed and holding a led-horse.

King Granary.

The Crimea and the whole Black Sea region, owing to the sparse popu- lation to consume it, had a great sur- plus of wheat. For centuries it was coveted by all hungry nations—and exploited by the one with the strong- est armies. For centuries after Athens had feasted upon the grain-raising lands beyond Bosphorus, Mithridates, as a preparation for his life and death contest with Rome, fell upon the corn fields of the Crimea. Because Sicily was yellow with wheat from earliest memory, through ages and ages she was raided by all the powers of the world. It was because of Egypt's corn, more plentiful than any- where else along the Mediterranean, that Caesar and Pompey wanted the land of the Ptolemies. It was when Rome held or controlled the granaries—her first and dearest conquests—of Sicily, Bardinia, Spain and Egypt that she could become mistress of the world.

Not Proper Comparison.

The old dinky had driven his fare to the hotel and was now demanding a dollar for his service. "Why?" pro- tested the passenger, "a dollar for that distance? Why, it isn't half a mile as the crow flies." "Dat's true boss," re- turned Sambo, with an appealing smile, "but 'ee see, dat old crow he ain't got free wites an' ten children to support, not to mention de keep foh de boss."

Happiness.

Happiness means to be with someone to see it, to converse with it, to feel it.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY.

Miss Camille—My friends should be very thankful to me.

Miss Abigail—For what?

Miss Camille—At the very great number of disagreeable things I think of, but don't say.

SKIN HUMOR 25 YEARS

"Cuticura did wonders for me. For twenty-five years I suffered agony from a terrible humor, completely cover- ing my head, neck and shoulders, so even to my wife, I became an object of dread. At large expense I consult- ed the most able doctors far and near. Their treatment was of no avail, nor was that of the Hospital, during six months' efforts. I suffered on and on, and concluded there was no help for me this side of the grave. Then I heard of some one who had been cured by Cuticura Remedies and thought that a trial could do no harm. In a surprisingly short time I was com- pletely cured. S. P. Keyes, 147 Con- gress St., Boston, Mass., Oct. 15, '98."

Face Covered with Pimples

"I congratulate Cuticura upon my speedy recovery from pimples which covered my face. I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent for ten days and my face cleared and I am perfect- ly well. I had tried doctors for sev- eral months but got no results. Wm. J. Sadlier, 1614 Susquehanna Ave. Phil- adelphia, May 1, 1909."

SAMPLES OF COLLEGE HUMOR

Professor's Somewhat Startling Re- quest—Student Philosophy—Care- ful Wife's Warning.

A new German professor in a girls' college wishing to detain one of the students, said: "Oh, Miss —, may I hold you a minute after class?"

This advice was given by one of the students to her mates: "Girls, take all the courses you can with the men professors, for the women of the fac- ulty try to find out how much you know, and the men try to show off how much they know."

The wife of one of the professors warned him as he went off to officiate at a funeral one rainy day: "Now, John, don't stand with your bare head on the damp ground; you'll surely catch cold."—Lile.

No one need speak of monotony if only they just look around for an- other's wants.—Royston.

God bless the girl who works! She is not proud to earn her own living, nor ashamed to be caught at her daily task. She smiles at you from behind the counter or desk or printer's case.

There is a sweet memory in everything she touches. She is like the brave mountaineer, already far up the precipice—climbing, struggling, rejoicing. The very sight is an inspiration. It is an honor to know this girl and to be worthy of her esteem. Lift your hat to her, young man, as she passes by. She's a queen in the realm of womanhood. She's a princess in the kingdom of labor.

Her hand may be stained by dishwashing, factory grease or printer's ink, but it is an honest hand. It stays misfortune from the home; it supports an invalid loved one, maybe; it is a moving, potent shield that protects many a family from the poorhouse. All honor to the brave toiler. God bless and protect the girl who works!

Wheat harvesting was begun in this locality the first of this week and the crop here is generally reported to promise a bigger yield and better quality of grain than has been produced here for a number of years. Timothy hay will be very poor and will not make much this year, but alfalfa is largely taking the place of time hay anyhow—Aurora Independent.

The Recorder's esteem friend, Murray T. Williams, Editor and publisher of the Rising Sun Local, makes this editorial announcement in his paper:

"Stockings should not be washed in the same water which has been used in washing white clothes, as they are apt in that case to become covered with lint."

Can that ought to be laid by at this time needs at least two more plowings, but by the time the ground will be dry enough to stir again, the wheat harvest will be claiming the attention of those who have wheat, of which there are some good fields.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. (Dink) Rice and two sons, of Texas, are guests of his brother, W. J. Rice and family. Both of Mr. Rice's sons are grown and born in Kansas, where their parents resided many years before moving to Texas. The family contemplates locating in Virginia.

E. F. Norman, of Gunpowder, one of the Recorder's most liberal patrons in the way of subscription, was a caller at this office, Tuesday. He says if it is nothing else to eat this winter he will have plenty of apples and honey.

The frequent showers of the past several days have not had any effect towards reducing the heat.

Local Happenings.

There has been no change in the condition of Mrs. Dudley Rouse during the past week.

Receipts of the Johnson-Jefferson fight were $270.275. A large amount of money badly invested.

The bank statements will appear in next week's issue. Only four of the ten sent in their statements this week, and were in better spirits than they had been at any time since the first of April.

A small crowd attended county court, last Monday. The farmers were delighted with the progress their crops had made during the ten days previous, and were in better spirits than they had been at any time since the first of April.

The first report to reach Burlington in regard to the result of the prize fight at Reno, last Monday, gave the battle to Jeff, and some exultation was manifested, but the report was corrected in a few minutes, when each one exclaimed: "Just as I expected."

By knocking Jeffries out at Reno, last Monday, Jack Johnson, colored, became the undisputed heavy weight champion pugilist of the world. Johnson is a negro, but he has won his spurs fairly, a cool white man making it possible for him to capture the belt.

The pooled wool has not been sold as yet. The price of wool began to drop immediately after the pool was made, and at no time has as much as 27 cents been offered for the wool. Those who own the wool are able to hold it indefinitely if they see proper so to do.

D. B. Wallace, cashier of Walton Equitable Bank and Trust Company, was a caller at this office, last Monday. Mr. Wallace was owner and publisher of the Warsaw Independent for many years, and a newspaper office is full of charms for him yet. Mr. Wallace is under the Recorder's excellent service at Walton as its increasing circulation in that quarter shows.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(By Supt. Riley.)

Teachers' examinations for July will be held the third Friday and Saturday. Several schools have no teachers as yet. There are about fifteen openings in the county. July 25 is the opening day of the Institute. The Institute will be conducted more on the lecture plan this year. Some teachers are from attending the Institute by law, however, all teachers are expected to be present on Friday. If teachers are actually in earnest we will not find them looking for excuses for not attending the Institute. The examination for appointees to State University, July 15.

Every bank, both national and State, was called on at the same time this month for a statement of its condition. The Controller of the Currency and the bank superintendents of every State in the union had an agreement by which the States should call for statements for the condition of State banks at the same time that the call was made for the national banks. This is the first time that the calls were ever made all at the same time. The purpose is to get an accurate statement of the condition of the banks of the whole country on a particular day.

J. F. Blyth was down on Gunpowder, one afternoon, last week, and was landing two and a half and three pound bass as fast as a boy could string them. The sporter exceeded any he ever before had with pole and line, and there was no indication of its ever ending, but just as he was in the act of landing the 43" bass, a blue bottle tickled the end of his nose and by the time he put it to flight, Mr. Blyth had returned to the realities of life, and found himself sitting beneath the spreading limbs of a large shade tree in his yard.

The biggest outing of the season will be the Odd-Fellows picnic at Harvest Home grounds on the 18th inst. Everything possible will be done to make it the most enjoyable and profitable occasion in the history of that popular resort of pleasure-seekers. See adv. in another column.

The heaviest rain for many years fell at Burlington last Tuesday between 12 and 1 o'clock. Considerable rain has fallen throughout the county the past week, and farm work is totally suspended, and there is no telling when the ground will do to work again—not this week.

PIC-NIC!

The Odd-Fellows' Lodges of Boone County will have a grand outing and picnic at the Harvest Home Grounds near Limaburg on Saturday, July 16th, '10

Welcome Address by A. Kirtley Johnson, of Walton Lodge.

SPEAKING.

During the day addresses will be delivered by the following eloquent speakers:

I. N. WILLIAMS, Grand Master.

M. J. DURHAM, Grand Treasurer.

HON. R. H. ELLISTON, of Williamstown.

REV. W. H. McMILLAN, of Big Bone.

REV. B. W. NELSON, of Beaver Lick.

Good music has been secured for the occasion, and at the conclusion of the speaking the pavilion will be surrendered to the lovers of the dance, who can trip the light fantastic the remainder of the day free of any charge.

Everybody is invited to attend, and as no picnic is a success without a big dinner, all who can are respectfully requested to bring baskets of provision.

This will be an occasion which nothing will be omitted that is calculated to contribute to the enjoyment of both young and old.

Remember the time and place and come.

Committee on Arrangements—F. A. Utz, Ben Stephens, Owen Aylor, of Venus Lodge.

A marked copy of a paper was received at this office, a few days since, containing several alleged reasons why the Democrats should nominate and elect "Ban Johnson Governor of Kentucky. To more than overcome all the reasons given, the Recorder offers just this one: why they should not: James B. McCreary is still alive and a citizen of Kentucky.

Why? Because it is annoying, untidy. And mostly, because it almost invariably leads to baldness. Cure it, and save your hair. Get more, too, at the same time. All easily done with Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula. Stop this formation of dandruff!

Does not change the color of the hair. Formulas with each bottle. Show it to your doctor. Ask him about it. Take him to his wife.

The new Ayer's Hair Vigor will certainly do this work, because, first of all, it destroys the germs which are the original cause of dandruff. Having given this aid, nature completes the cure. The scalp is restored to a perfectly healthy condition.

Repair Department Up-to-Date Work Done
when Promised.

Not responsible for repair work in case of fire.

The Fiscal Court of Boone County rendered a decision Wednesday which is of the utmost importance for the villages of Dry Ridge and Crittenden. According to their decision no funds will be furnished by the county out of the school tax levied for the purpose of maintaining a high school at either of those districts. The decision of the Court was that the funds of the county should be used for the high school purposes, and this means, if the decision is sustained, it will no doubt be carried out, although Dry Ridge and Crittenden voted a tax to aid in maintaining a high school, so far as the Fiscal Court is concerned, they will get no help from the county.

According to the decision the high schools that have already been established at the villages named will have to be discontinued. The decision is especially hard on the people of Dry Ridge. They voted a tax of 19 1/2 cents on the $100 worth of taxable property at an election nearly a year ago, and voted it almost unanimously. Added to this there is the regular school tax, which amounts to 20 cents on the $100, a total of 39 cents on the $100. Dry Ridge pays for school purposes. And above and beyond all this the people of Dry Ridge have agreed to pay out of their own pockets the sum of $3,000 to assist in erecting a suitable high school building, the same to also be used for the common school.

It seems almost certain that the Dry Ridge people will bring suit against the Fiscal Court to compel them to allow that district a reasonable part of the funds for high school purposes, and a very interesting legal battle may be expected to ensue.

The Fiscal Court this year decided to levy a tax of 15 cents on the $100 for school purposes. The last year it levied 20 cents on the $100. The County Board of Education voted to give to the Dry Ridge district the sum of $3,000 for the purpose of aiding the high school.

It is now thought that a mandamus suit will be brought to compel the Fiscal Court to levy a 20 cent tax, the same as has been levied heretofore, and to give the Dry Ridge school the $3,000 desired.

The Fiscal Court is evidently laboring under the theory that there shall be only one high school in the county and that it shall be at the county seat. The law on the matter is very plain, and is to the effect that the high school may be established anywhere in the county.

Ex-Superintendent C. C. Adams, who is the official adviser and attorney for the Court, urged the Court to give Dry Ridge and Crittenden what he considered their due, and advised the Court that he believed they would be better off if the matter got into the Courts. Magistrate J. W. Jackson was the only member of the Court who voted in favor of the Dry Ridge school. Judge Simmon, Simpson of the Second district, and Webster, of the Third, voting against it.

It is understood that the people of Dry Ridge and Crittenden are justly indignant at the manner in which they have been treated, and that immediate steps will be taken to compel the Fiscal Court to reverse its decision, which smacks a good deal of partiality.

It is predicted that the new law requiring the jurors only to decide whether the accused is guilty or not, leaving the duty to assess the penalty, will do away with hung juries in large measure. It is hoped that the prediction will prove true. Such a law works to that effect in the Federal Courts, but we fear that with the composition and the qualification of jurors unchanged, they will, knowing the penalty, be almost as shy of pronouncing guilt as formerly. It is a pity in the right direction. Grievous is the responsibility sometimes placed upon a juror to do their duty but who let their sympathy run away with their idea of justice and duty. Maybe when they do not have to say as many words that a man shall be hanged or imprisoned for life they will not feel such a struggle between duty and sympathy.—Lexington Herald.

Those Pies of Boyhood.

How delicious were the pies of boyhood. No pies now ever taste so good. What's changed? The pies? No. It's you. You've lost the strong, healthy stomach, the vigorous liver, the active kidneys, the regular bowels of boyhood. Your digestion is poor and you blame the food. What's needed? A complete-toning up by Electric Bitters of all organs of digestion—Stomach, Liver, Kidneys, Bowels. They will restore your boyhood appetite and appreciation of food and fairly saturate your body with new health. Get a bottle at Bent's drug store, Elmer.

Every sheep in Kentucky will be placed under the ban of State wide quarantine, effective not later than August 1, and the quarantine will not be raised until owners of sheep have complied with the general order of the State Livestock Sanitary Board.

A number of crops of the 1910 tobacco, which has barely begun to grow, have been contracted for at prices as high as $1.00 a green and frozen—Carrollton News.

All kinds of vegetation has been growing rapidly for the past ten days. The weather and warm weather were exactly what the growing crops needed.

The busiest little things ever made are Dr. King's New Life Pills. Every pill is a sugar coated globe of health, that changes weakness into strength, languor into energy, broods into mental power; curing Constipation, Headache, Chills, Dyspepsia, and Malaria. 25c at Bent's drug store, Elmer.

Plans to organize a strong union of produce growers as a branch of the American Society of Equity.

Peppers, July 15th and Oct. 15th. Potatoes and onion crops in the state of Kentucky are well under way by growers living in Jefferson County. Already a strong organization has been formed in this county, and immediate steps, it is stated, will be taken toward pooling the crops.

The importance of such a pool will be recognized when it is remembered that last year Kentucky's yield was 3,500,000 bushels, and the prospect for this crop this year will probably run into millions of bushels.

At present time potatoes are bringing only $1.05 on the local market and the farmers claim that they should be receiving not less than $1.25 to $1.50. As the pool is formed they assert that they may set their price at $1.50, but the announcement is not official.

The promoters of the pool say that no time will be lost in making the pool statewide. Every county will be covered and canvassed.

Each season I plow up a lot of land that has been occupied by the chickens, and in this way keep the ground sweet, says a correspondent in American Poultry World. I have been troubled but little by disease among my flock but whenever a chick shows signs of diarrhoea I kill it and burn the carcass as I think this is the only way to prevent infection. I keep the chicks away from manure as much as possible, believing that what they get in such places will not benefit them. I keep them well supplied with clean water and feed at all times and believe that if they are thus well fed that they will prefer to spend their time picking good green grass bugs and worms and dusting themselves in good old Mother Earth in preference to eating and wallowing in filth.

The care and attention bestowed upon fowls will show in the looks of the fowls as well as in the profits to be made from them. It pays to be kind to the birds and see that they are well cared for. One cannot expect to be successful in the poultry business otherwise than by raising more poultry, more poultry keepers, and more common sense among poultry keepers, and now is the best time to begin.

Let the Master will hear proof on the value of the personal estate of the decedent Jamison Aylor, including money, notes, bonds, etc.

Let the Master hear any proof which may be offered by either side of how much money or property or things of value have been advanced to the parties to this action or either of them, who advanced, and if other than money the value thereof, including the use and occupation of land.

In accordance with the foregoing order I will begin my sittings at the place within and out of condition you will note a radical change in three or four weeks.—Farmers Home Journal.

In addition to her annual tax to manage the land, the Boone county has, in the last five years contributed more money to roads, bridges and school houses than during the building now under construction than she did for half a century or more preceding. The change of public sentiment in this county in regard to roads and public education has been almost radical in the last few years, and if the pace the county is going in these matters is maintained she will soon take rank among the leading counties in the State as regards schools and roads.

State Wide Quarantine.

Train loads of tobacco are now being fed to sheep and lambs, it's no longer, "Will tobacco prevent or cure stomach worms, and is it safe to feed it?" Let the educators and experimentalists say what they will, the tobacco treatment is "doing the work" all over this land. Tobacco either in the proprietary medicines and foods, or fed alone with salt, has cured hundreds of lambs and that means the saving of thousands of flocks who had almost given up in despair their fight against the stomach and intestinal pests. Don't be afraid of tobacco. Feed it three times a week. Give it to your horses and cattle and your hogs. If they are weary or out of condition, you will note a radical change in three or four weeks.—Farmers Home Journal.

The almost simultaneous deaths of Senators Danells, of Virginia and McHenry, of Mississippi, will have a marked effect upon the Democratic side of the Senate of the United States. By reason of their long service they occupied ranking places on many committees, and their deaths have created vacancies to which Senators next in seniority below them will rise. In turn there will be many shifts among the minority members on Senate committees.

Don't For Farmers.
Don't fail to give them water at short intervals this hot weather.
Don't drive your horse fast.
Don't start them in the sun when moving them across the street you can find shade.
Don't fail if they show signs of exhaustion to give them a half hour's rest.
Don't lash your teams.
This is a season of the year when all drivers should be very careful not to let their teams become overheated. The only way in which this can be prevented is by lightening the load they are pulling by careful driving, by watering the teams often and resting in the shade.

A statement by the agricultural department shows that the income of the country from the hen and her products now amounts to $255,000,000. This reveals the fact that the poultry products of the country are worth more than the wheat crop.

The Big Bone and Covington Traction Company has arrived at a point where something tangible must result at an early date. It has come up to the point where dirt will soon have to begin to fly.

Owing to the thousands of dollars being tied up in the tobacco pool, money matters in this section is naturally somewhat close at this time, says the Georgetown News.

The pooled tobacco is being hauled from Burlington to the warehouse at Bellevue as fast as it is put in horseheads. Elmer Foster is hauling it.

The Lawrenceburg fair has issued its premium list for the 1910 fair, and announced that the fair will be an improvement over all of the past.

Mr. Bryan's dipping his spoon into the Democratic soup bowl did not result in creating the confusion anticipated in Ohio.

A dry June for a good crop year is an advantage that is watched closely by the farmers.

The loss of property by fire in Kentucky during the year 1909 amounted to $2,490,851.

The victory of J. Owen Cantrell presents an anomaly which will require the judgment and patriotism of every tobacco grower in this district to solve. The News-Herald opposed his nomination because it believed he was either an enemy of the Burley Tobacco Society, or a very dangerous leader. On the other hand a large majority of the voters of the district stood for him, and the reason for this is that the majority of the people of the district are enemies of the pool, or else they regard him as a safe and wise leader in the best of the conflict it is possible that many failed to see clearly the real issues involved, and their votes represent a passionate sentiment rather than a serious and thoughtful judgment. For him stood nearly every man who fought the pool; for him stood a large element of discontented who had failed to obtain leadership in the society, and many who never have seen clearly the workings of the organization. It would not be fair at all to say that all his followers were made up of these classes, for many good men, and true followers of his banner and fought valiantly for him. It is too late now to attempt an analysis of the various reasons assigned by them only in so far as it is wise to plan for the future and help to build up the fortunes of the Society.

To us it seems that Mr. Cantrell has been put in a position where he must assume the responsibility of making the 1910 pool. It is time for him and his leaders to assume the burden of giving to the people a "Cure All" for the troubles thru which we have passed. Those who supported Mr. Thomas are ready to pool their tobacco under any and all circumstances. They will sign any kind of a contract which a majority of the people want. They will not oppose, criticize, nor attempt to fear down the work of others along this line. Will Mr. Cantrell and his adherents agree to do the same thing? It is time we were getting together. Any man can fear down. It requires patience, patriotism and unanimity to build up. Let us build up, not tear down our Society.—Owen Herald.

Going to The Devil.
A great many people believe, or make believe, that the whole country is going to the devil as fast as it can. Just why they hold, or pretend to hold to this belief does not appear; still we are told every day that such is the case.

We hear this talk in face of the fact that most folks have three square meals per day—a course of treatment that gives more tone to the human system than any yet devised—and that a vast majority of the people of the country have enough rags to hide most of their nakedness—a state of affairs which adds much to the sum of common decency.

The men who figure out the statistics—the perusal of which reminds one of reading the dictionary—say that our crops last year were worth over nine billions of dollars—a statement which would lead one to believe that the soil, even in this effete age, retains much of its virgin fertility. And though we are not to starve, the pessimist would have us believe that an unkindly fate has decreed that in order that we may be reserved from death in some other manner.

We have not heard of manna falling from above since the children of Israel longed for the flesh pots of Egypt in the wilderness; and, some, having read of that stand, mouth agape, expecting something to fall in, and cursing somebody else because that expected fall to happen. Mischief was not the only one who waited for something to turn up. There are still people in the world who would not accept the corn stalks it was: whole, ed, ground, baked, chewed, digested and maybe more.

Elbow grease, although it may not rank with the ineffable gifts of God to man, is at least one of the most useful. Properly applied it will do more than anything else to breed content with one's lot in life. Three hours hard work will cure any case of blues. The disease may return but the cure is also always at hand. It is in the elbow grease! Down with croaking!

The State Fire Marshall's report for the year ending December 31, 1909, shows that during the year three frame buildings valued at $1,450 insured for $3,050 were destroyed by fire in Boone county, resulting in a loss of $7,350.

Early estimates and advanced figures intended for the 1910 Red Book of the Bureau of Statistics indicate that in all the farmers of Missouri in 1909 devoted 5,010 acres of land to tobacco, and at the acreage production of 865 pounds to the acre the dry crop for the year amounted to 4,338,650 pounds of leaf.

Carl Craven, 23, eldest son of Charles J. Craven and wife, of Constance, died at Colorado Springs, Colorado, on Friday of last week. He left home last fall for Texas, in search of health, and seemed to be getting along very well until about one month ago, his father learned that he was improving, but instead he was growing worse, and he went to Texas to bring him home, but he had gone to Colorado. Last Friday, he received word that he was dead, and he left immediately for Colorado to bring back the remains. He arrived at Constance with them Wednesday morning about nine o'clock, and the funeral took place from the church at Hebron that afternoon at three o'clock. The burial was in the cemetery of which the young man was a member, having charge. He leaves a father, mother and two brothers, the Burlington K. of P. lodge, of which he was a member, and a host of relatives in this sad hour of bereavement.

Political conditions in Illinois, as shown by a recent newspaper poll of that State, are sadly mixed. The recent sensational charges effecting the election of United States Senator Lorimer appear to have broken down party lines, and to have created a general feeling of dissatisfaction and unrest in every quarter of the State. Out of it has come a demand for a change in the present leadership of both parties. Indeed, there is found a strong sentiment for the formation of a third party to be composed of the progressive and clean men of both the old parties.

The farm of Nichols county are evidencing much discouragement over the outlook for crops. For lack of hands and pretty weather to harvest it, the crop is ruining in the fields and what is cut is beginning to sprout in the shock. Clover is rotting, corn has been blown down by the ground until it is impossible to give it further cultivation, tobacco that has escaped the ravages of the floods is growing only in spots and will not make half a crop and vegetables are decaying from the wet weather. The farmers claim the outlook for crops is the gloomiest in the history of the county.

Three hundred foreigners are converted into American citizens in New York state by the process of naturalization daily. The process is an impressive one, which inspires respect and patriotism in the subjects. The laws governing naturalization are strict and rigidly enforced. Any time after arriving in this country application may be made and the subsequent declaration of intention filed. With the filing of this declaration the applicant takes an oath to support the sovereign and support the constitution. Two years after the declaration has been made and five years after arrival the final papers may be taken out. On the event the oaths of two citizens that the applicant is eligible are required. The administering of the oaths is an extended process, and when the chief clerk has gone down the list of two hundred or more, his voice is ready for a rest. Only "thout he" who come to this country take out citizens papers, the purpose of many being simply to stay long enough to get some money, and then return to their homes across the big water.

Destroys Hair Germs

Recent discoveries have shown that falling hair is caused by germs at the roots of the hair. Therefore, to stop falling hair, you must first completely destroy these germs. Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, will certainly do this. Then leave the rest to nature.

Does not change the color of the hair.

Recent discoveries have also proved that dandruff is caused by germs on the scalp. Therefore, to cure dandruff, the first thing to do is to completely destroy these dandruff germs. Here, the same Ayer's Hair Vigor will give the same splendid results.

Convivial Gentleman Never So Far Gone as to Be Unable to Distinguish Colors.

The door was left open for the oldest son to come in late at a home near Carlisle street and Snyder avenue, a few nights ago, but before the son arrived a neighbor who had been out with "the boys" invaded the home and selected nothing less than the parlor, where he seated himself in a large rocking chair and began singing. A little daughter of the family was the first to hear the music and she ran to her mother, informing her after she had succeeded in arousing her that she heard some one singing. It was only after the mother listened several minutes that she, too, heard and was convinced that it was in their house. The husband and father was aroused and headed the procession around the stairs with a lighted candle. As he reached the door to the parlor he made a rush at the man and was about to strike him when he recognized the intruder as his neighbor. The next morning the unfortunate fellow was found to paint his door and window frames a color different from that neighbor's home. He added that regardless where he spends his evenings, he never becomes color blind.—Philadelphia Times.

Engineering in Hospitals. Practical all the important infirmaries and hospitals in England have their own electric generating stations, and the size of the installations would surprise the majority of engineers. The equipment has to be designed with unusual care, owing to the special conditions which obtain in hospital work. Even where a public supply is available, the use of an independent system is justified on account of the security which it gives against failure of current at a critical moment. The installations are used for lighting, heating, ventilating, telephoning and other purposes, and many hospitals have laundries operated electrically. One county asylum has its own private electric railway for conveying supplies from the nearest railway station.

Fox Committed Suicide. During a run of the Godworth (Eng.) foxhounds recently the fox in order to escape from the bounds jumped down a 30-foot well, and it is presumed that he committed suicide. After being told the story an official of the Zoological society said that no animal ever intentionally ends its life. "I can only recall two creatures," he said, "who are supposed to commit suicide, and they are the scorpion and the crocodile. I have never quite satisfied myself as to these creatures. They both appear to kill themselves by their own stings, but I have always thought the death was accidental."

Instead of being much larger than for the previous year, as had been shown by every item of the receipts of the State from all sources for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1910, were about $18,000 less than the receipts for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1909. This surprising condition was noted when the totals in all departments were added up in the office of Capt. Ed Farley, State Treasurer. It was expected that there would be an increase in receipts for 1910, as the Board of Equalization increased the assessments in the State as a whole and the taxes were more than the previous year. Then the revenue agents have been busy, and it was thought that they, together with the State Inspectors, had had a hard time in collecting large sums of money and that the total of it all would be a considerable sum. But the collections were not to have been as heavy as was expected and instead of showing a gain over 1909 there is a less amount.

This is accounted for in part by the Auditor's office by the statement that there is yet uncollected as taxes on miscellaneous corporations about $50,000, which should be credited to 1910 and that many of the banks are also delinquent. Then, they say, in 1909 the collection of $100,000 from the Southern Pacific railroad would do the total collections for that year beyond the normal, so that it is hardly fair to compare the year 1909 with the previous or subsequent year. The fact remains, however, that in spite of all the anticipation there has been a falling off in the receipts in the last year.

His English Income. "Once you make American money," said the man who had lived in England, "you are forever spoiled for life in England. You can't go back, that's all. American money is so much more reckless than English money. You must make so much more of it. Now, when I lived in London I made the magnificent sum of $35 a week, and had a valet on it was pointed out as the man who made seven pounds a week. I was a wonder, a marvel! Tell me, how far would seven pounds go here in New York? Could you keep a valet on it? No. You couldn't keep a yellow dog in the style in which a New York yellow dog expects to be kept."

Train the Girls for Wifehood. The crying defect of this age is that the average girl will learn only a smattering of the manifold and complicated details of housekeeping. She expects to marry a man who will be able to "hire a girl." Domestic servants now get wages which average all things included—more than the average mechanic, and they are not as a rule, well trained, but are wasteful and extravagant. The wife leaves most of the household management to the servants, not only because it is easier to do so, but because she does not know how to do anything else. It is like taking a truck driver, and without any preliminary training, making him superintendent of a railroad. The girls need to be trained to become better wives and mothers. At present they get, in many instances, at most no training, save some of a kind which is worse than none at all.—Lippincott's Magazine.

HENRY C. LASSING

An Eminent Physician Dies at His Home Near Union

Was in His Seventy-Eighth Year—Had Been in Delicate Health for Several Years.

Dr. Henry C. Lassing, who had been in delicate health for several years, died at his home in Union neighborhood, on Tuesday, July 7th. He was born in Union, this county on October 2d, 1832, and was the second son of Morris and Martha Hamilton Lassing. His father was born August 3d, 1800, in Bavaria, Germany, and came directly from the old country to this county in 1824.

After reaching manhood's estate Dr. Lassing chose medicine as a profession, and entered the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati to prepare himself for the responsibilities of a new profession. He assumed in his chosen profession. He graduated with honor from that institution in 1856, when he became the practical physician among the people where he was reared, and where he gained eminence as a physician, serving the public faithfully and conscientiously until his health failed him several years since. His ability as a doctor was recognized and acknowledged throughout Kentucky, and at the time of his death he was a member of the American Medical Association; of the Kentucky State Medical Society, and the Boone County Medical Society.

He was made a Royal Arch Mason in 1865, and was a member of Boone Union Lodge, F. & A. M. for 35 years, and died in the 7th order as in every station of life, Dr. Lassing was a safe counselor to whom the attentive care of his patients was a duty.

On December 1st, 1863, Dr. Lassing was united in marriage with Miss Anna Coleman, of St. Louis, Missouri. To them six children were born, all of whom survive. They are Judge John M. Lassing, a member of the Kentucky court in appeals; Henry C. Lassing, a prominent attorney at law in Nashville, Tennessee; Mrs. Joseph Collins, of Crittenden, Grant county; Mrs. Joseph H. Hacy, of Union, this county; Walter E. Lassing, an officer in the United States Army, and now stationed at Blue Field, Nicaragua; and Coleman Lassing, who is at home.

When the war between the States came, Dr. Lassing espoused the cause of the South, and it was in that bloody conflict the tender sympathies of this good man shown to their best advantage. He administered to the relief of his unfortunate comrades either after the battle or while on march.

Dr. Lassing was a fine student and a good book was his constant companion, but owing to his retiring disposition, it required an intimate acquaintance with him in order to become familiar with his varied attainments. His mind was a rich store house of useful information, but of it no display was made. He was a quiet, and in his death the county has sustained the loss of one of its best and most worthy citizens, while his family has lost a husband and the children a father, whose devotion was beautiful and such as makes the severing of family ties more disastrous.

The Masons, the teachings of whose order were dear to Dr. Lassing, tenderly consigned the remains to their departed brother to their last resting place in the cemetery at Richmond church, last Saturday afternoon, in the presence of a large crowd of sorrowing friends and neighbors.

Those Pies of Boyhood.

How delicious were the pies of boyhood. No pies now ever taste so good. What has changed the pies? No. It's you. You've lost the strong, healthy stomach, the vigorous liver, the active kidneys, the healthy bowels of boyhood. Your digestion is poor, and you blame the food. What's needed? A complete toning up of the digestive system. Liver, Kidneys, Bowels—try them. They'll restore your boyhood appetite and appreciation of food and fairly saturate your body with new health, strength and vigor. See at Bentler's drug store, Erlanger.

After An Absence of 30 Years.

On the morning of July 3d, upon my return home from an all night watch, it was a great pleasure to find awaiting me my brother, J. J. Rice and his family that went out west 30 years ago, and I had never had the pleasure of seeing him during those years, but must admit that the only thing about him that was familiar was his walk. His time had not changed at all. And I'm glad that God was instrumental in bringing them back to us. I hope He may also be instrumental in locating him somewhere near us the rest of his life, so we may be of some comfort to each other what time we are left on this earth. While in my boyhood days I did look at this life as I do now, I have grown into manhood. As I grow in age my affections are much greater for those I love and they seem much dearer to me than ever before. M. S. RICE.

At the beginning of the season the Climax baseball club of New-View, turned Ed Sanford, of Bellevue, a few days ago he was in the box for Rising Sun when they had the Climax as their opponents, and Sanford was now the pitcher. The Climax batters. He simply put the ball over the plate so fast the Climax people could not see them.

A New Leaf Has Been Turned.
(Owen County Democrat.)
From the verdicts of those who have traveled in many states and have banded dame fortune in many climates, we are led to believe that we live in one of the best counties in the union. We have a climate that is conducive of health, not too hot or too cold, and the soil based on limestone and clay bottom is a fertile top soil may be formed by rotation of crops. The seasons here are delightful from the winter's snowfall, to the summer's sunshine, with very few droughts to mar the pleasure or mar the plans of the most industrious. A crop is raised every season by those who use a little wisdom and industry in working the fertile fields, and thus makes the cost of living but small to those who rely on mother earth for a livelihood.
That our country is no better is due to the fact that many have farmed with no thought of the future, living only in the present.

No longer are men careless with their land in our good county. A new leaf has been turned and ere long the verdict of those who have passed away, the fields of Owen will be a hundred per cent better. Farming is no longer guess work. Men do things now that they know will produce certain results. No longer do men put corn on the same field year after year until worn out; they have adopted the plan of rotation of crops. Rye is sown to turn for fertilizer. Clover is plowed under in season for fertilizer, and many things done that a few years ago was unheard of.
Slack lime and fertilizer is used in quantities where a few years ago they were not thought necessary.

No county can boast of a soil that is more productive. No country has better people.
What we need is better schools and better roads. Better schools means better educated people. In the eyes of long ago an education was not considered necessary for a farmer. A few more years will see agriculture taught in every common school.
Better roads means a higher standard of civilization. There is nothing that stimulates the pride of a people so much as fine thoroughfares.
The fact that transportation is facilitated.

There is a disposition on the part of the farming classes of our county to have better fencing, better farm houses and stock barns, and it is only a question of time when every farmer will be straining every nerve to accept his neighbor in the improvement of his farm and buildings. The possibilities of this county are many and industry and science are the things that will make blossom as the rose.
In Trouble Again.
Detectives Sandford and Saiters last night arrested W. Keyes, alias, Frank R. Mitchell, on a warrant charging false swearing, and locked him up at police headquarters. Keyes was indicated in the famous "Shanty boat" murder, near Lawrenceburg, about 15 years ago. He has also served a term in the State Penitentiary for counterfeiting. Harry Woodward, who was with Keyes, was also arrested by the detectives on the charge of loitering. The arrest was made on Ninth, near Greenup street.
The above is from the Covington column in last Thursday's "Enterprise". The acquittal was April 21, 1891, that a verdict of not guilty was returned in the Boone circuit court in the prosecution of John Keyes charged with the murder of William Keyes. The prosecution of Bert Rust, indicted along with Keyes, was dismissed. The horrible murder and the trial of the accused are still fresh in the memory of nearly all the citizens of this county.

An Unexpected Turn.

(Georgetown News.)
Mr. David Graham, of Seattle, Washington, was in Georgetown the past week conferring with the heirs of Judge Henry Jones in regard to bringing suit against the State for the old Capitol site at Frankfort. Mr. Graham, who is a grandson of Judge Jones, declares that the above property was given to the State by Judge Jones to be used for the State buildings, but to revert to his heirs in case the Capitol was ever moved, and now since the State's affairs are being conducted from the new building, Mr. Graham wants the old site no longer belongs to them, but to the Jones heirs, and that the State has no right to contemplate, establish, or any other State institution on it. Attorneys Beckham and McQuinn of Frankfort have been engaged to investigate the claim of the Jones heirs, and to bring suit to recover the property, which is worth fully a half million dollars.

At a meeting of the Threshermen of the county it was decided that owing to the high price of labor and provisions, they could not thresh this year at less than 15 cents per bushel. Georgetown Times.

Reports from the blackberry patch, "the poor man's orchard," is to the effect that the crop is large and bids fair to be of fine quality. With fruit of all kinds scarce, the blackberry crop will come in very handy to fill the vacancy.—Winchester Democrat.

Editor Sargent, of the Berry Cilisen, is a sage. He says: "The reason that matrimony is so often a failure is because so many women look upon it as a 'paid ticket', and too many men, in getting a cook who won't give notice and quit, and who doesn't have to be paid any wages."

Dr. J. G. Slater, Ernest McElroy, Harria Watson and J. Waite Cross attended the Masonic lodge at Independence last Saturday night, and conferred the Master's degree on a couple of candidates. The evening was delightfully spent with the craft in our sister city and there were many pleasing features of the evening's program.

Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Harris, of Lexington, have been enjoying a very pleasant visit here to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Rouse and many friends, as Rev. The trustees of the Walton graded school, at their meeting last Saturday night, employed Miss Anna Hudson as one of the primary teachers for the coming school year, filling the same position as last year. Most enjoyable day was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Florence near Verona. It being the 50th birthday of Mrs. Florence, the usual yearly reunion of the Johnson family was celebrated. Mr. and Mrs. Florence entertained most delightfully in their beautiful country home, and made everyone feel that it was really a family affair. This family of nine sisters, all living, have much to be thankful for, and in their love and friendly feeling toward each other, and their yearly meeting together clearly manifest this appreciation of the Lord's guidance and protection over them. Hall of Walton Lodge, No. 719, F. and A. M., Walton, Ky., July 26, 1910.

Whereas, our lodge has again been called upon to mourn the loss of one of its beloved members, Rev. P. H. Hoffman, who passed to his heavenly reward Tuesday, June 28th, 1910, at his home at Wilmore, Jessamine Co., Ky., closing a long life of usefulness and benefit to mankind, after over eighty-one years sojourn on this mundane sphere, and recognizing his worth and merit, and desiring to add our appreciative words of his many excellent qualities, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of Brother Hoffman the fraternity has lost a true and faithful member whose fervency and zeal for the upbuilding of the principles of masonry marked his many years of useful membership in the order, and he left behind him the example of a true and noble life for the emulation of the craft and for its betterment.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved widow our heartfelt sympathy in this sad hour of temporary separation, knowing that the joyful bliss of a happy and eternal reunion in that celestial home above is distant but a short time even with the privilege of the greatest length of life.

Resolved, That as a minister of the gospel, a member of the masonic fraternity, and a good and upright citizen, he has surely won that welcome plaudit "Well done thou good and faithful servant that the lodge wear the violet countenance."

Resolved, That as a tribute to the memory of our beloved brother, a badge of mourning for thirty days, the resolutions be spread on the minutes of the lodge, and published in the Boone County Recorder and the Home Journal, and a copy sent to the bereaved widow.

For a picnic the weather was the most unpropitious ever, and as to whether the picnic will be held later or has not been decided, it has been thrown by the lot in the county, consequently the matter will have to be considered by each lodge before a final conclusion can be reached.

The Ice Cream Cones.

The ice cream cone is receiving attention in several American States. Federal officials are making under the pure food laws, recently seized a shipment of more than four and a half millions of cones that were being sent from New York to Texas. It is alleged that these cones contained hidden boric acid. The Chicago Health Department has been analyzing the cones sold in that city. Some of them were found to contain no injurious ingredients. Others were villainous compounds of acid and dirt. Some of the ice cream was found to be equally objectionable. In their original composition the ice cream cones contained nothing that was a menace to the public health. They have come to be such a popular vehicle for the sale of ice cream that millions of cones are being sold daily in the cities and towns of the United States. This popularity has encouraged their extensive manufacture, and as usual in such cases, a few of the manufacturers are not scrupulous about the make-up of the product. The discovery that certain harmful acids were being used by some of the cone makers health officials in various cities are taking notice. Regulations like those that have been made in Chicago are not pleasant to dwell upon, but they emphasize the necessity of watchfulness everywhere.

Joe Horner, who returned from Lexington, Thursday morning, at which place he had been attending the meeting of the Burley District Board of Control, believes a good sale will be made in a short time of considerable of the 1909 crop of pooled tobacco. He is of the opinion that as soon as the samples can be gotten in condition a sale can be made, and that it will be made. Various independent buyers are ready and anxious to get some of the tobacco. He thinks there is no doubt that a sale will be made soon. Grant County News

AN AGREEMENT REACHED

By The Burley Tobacco Society

After A Three Days' Wrangle Over the 1910 Pool.

Lexington, July 11.—The district board of the Burley Tobacco Society, after a three days' wrangle over the plans for the pool of the 1910 crop, finally reached an agreement this afternoon by deciding to adopt the plan which has, during the board's session, been repeatedly suggested by President Clarence Lebus, which provides that the members of the pool shall be, at the conclusion of the pooling campaign, informed by the district officials how many acres of tobacco have been pooled and given all other data in the possession of the society officials, and that the poolers themselves shall then vote by precincts whether or not the pool shall stand or be declared off.

This action was taken to-day after the motion by which the reports of the conference committee yesterday had been laid upon the table had been reconsidered. Upon motion of Lystra Witherspoon, of Woodford, the two reports were recommitted to the conference committee, which immediately retired to take up their consideration.

While the committee was absent, B. Brown, of Shelby, made a speech in which he admitted a change of position regarding the pledge amendment, and said that he was converted to the side since coming here that a per cent. clause would mean the deathknell of the organization. He paid a high compliment to the executive committee, and said that he believed that a "fine tooth comb" could not disclose the equal of Mr. Lebus as a leader.

W. O. Blackberry, of Bracken, advocated a firm stand by the body upon the ground it had occupied, and in this way vindicated the confidence of the growers in the ability, integrity and wisdom of their representatives. He suggested a resolution promising a strong pool or no pool, and said he believed the growers at large wanted no further guarantee.

At this juncture Senator R. H. Elliston, chairman of the conference committee, appeared with the report of the committee, which was along the same lines as the majority report made yesterday. Senator Elliston made a speech explaining why the committee still thought this the most feasible plan.

President Lebus then made a stirring speech in which he appealed to the members of the board to lay aside all minor differences and agree upon the report which provided a plan thoroughly fair and just to all. The report was then put to a vote and adopted.

The report hereinafter suggested by the Burley Board or its committee.

"Each pooler at said election to be permitted to vote upon the question of the number of acres he has pooled, and will be supplied with a ballot for that purpose. After said vote is taken at the precinct, the result will be reported immediately to the county board, and the result tabulated and counted and reported to headquarters at Lexington. The result of the entire district will then be ascertained at headquarters by careful computation and count and the question of determining whether or not a pool shall be declared off or on shall be determined by this final count, the majority of the voters to determine the matter either for or against the pool."

No Politics in It.

Last year it was claimed that the Farmers-Institute were under the influence of Republicans for political purposes. The meetings, in many counties, were held in out-of-the-way places, and about the only notice given were private ones to Republicans. This year there will be no such complaints. The meetings will be held at the county seat some time between August 1st and December 1st, the exact time to be fixed later. The time shall be fully advertised at least thirty days before the meeting. No member of the

Caused By a Thunderstorm.

A rather peculiar happening has caused some sensation in Beaver county, Oklahoma, where on the farm of Mrs. Josie Peble, an oil well was started as the result of a thunderstorm. In the course of the storm a lightning bolt plowed a deep furrow down an old canyon and dug out a big hole at the bottom, from which 200 barrels of crude petroleum are now bubbling out every day. Mrs. Peble has been offered $1000 per acre for the land around the well but has refused to consider any bids whatever, and intends to develop and exploit the remarkable property herself.

Make Arrangements at Atchard Meeting To Be Held at Hebron in August.

Farmers should begin preparing to make interesting their institute which will be held at Hebron in August. Ample arrangements will be made for the accommodation of visitors, and the people of Hebron and vicinity will make all glad of having spent a couple of days in their midst, as the people in that part of the county are as hospitable as can be found in Kentucky.

Now a word to the farmers. The institute will be just what you make it. Without your cooperation all the lectures that can be sent to you can achieve very little. The institute is for your special benefit, and can be made a source of information if those who attend and bring to the attention of the lecturers and other farmers the subjects on which they desire instruction. The time has come in Kentucky when farming must be conducted on scientific principles which have been worked out and their correctness proven. It is to be that the Kentucky farmer who sowed was sure to reap, and containing all the elements necessary to make a successful farmer. But old time farming has exhausted many of the most successful farmers in the soil, and to be a successful farmer now, it is necessary to know something more than how to plant and plow. The "farmer's" institute is for the purpose of instruction along scientific lines.

Attend the institute at Hebron in August and see it, at the end of the two days session, you have not profited greatly thereby.

Out in the "Show Me" State. The State Agricultural department of Missouri each year publishes what is called the "Red Book," giving the agricultural products of the "Show Me" State. It is of interest to Burley growers to know that the "Red Book" reports that only 4,460,000 pounds of tobacco was grown there in 1909 (not all Burley) and that the total in the state is less than half the amount grown in Mason county alone. If that is the best the state can show under the stimulation of extra prices for inferior tobacco, free seed and men to teach cultivation, furnished by the American Tobacco Company and the Warehouse combination, there is little cause for fear that Missouri will supplant Kentucky in the production of Burley Tobacco.

Not So in Boone. It is estimated that 35,900 acres are planted in tobacco in Kentucky this year as against 385,448 acres in 1909 an increase of 30,000 acres. The reports from some counties are very discouraging while other counties report that plants were never set out under more favorable conditions and that they were strong and have grown well and promise record yields. About half the acreage is white Burley. The above is from an exchange published in the blue grass belt, and in the matter of the increase of acreage does not hold good in Boone by any means. Here the acreage is considerably short of that pitched last year, in many fields the plants are in bad condition.

Considerably Exaggerated. In the opinion of well-informed statisticians the falling off in the crop of spring wheat is considerably exaggerated and throws out the country as far as its effect upon the great transportation companies and upon the total yield of cereals is concerned. It was pointed out that the corn acreage showed an increase of over 5,000,000 acres, while the condition of winter wheat is more important crop than spring wheat showed an increase for July over the report of June 1. The corn crop promises to be so large that in the opinion of many of these statisticians the amount of cereals which is to be transported will exceed that of last year.

The Colonel and his command are well behaved people and are welcomed by the citizens in the neighborhood of the camp.

State of Kentucky, County of Boone, I, Hubert Walton, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Hubert Walton, Cashier. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of June, 1910.

My commission expires Mar. 4, 1914. Everett L. Helms, Notary Public. Wm. Stephens, J. M. Grant, E. T. Krutz, Direct rs.

A good deal has been said in the papers lately about the two little Alabama boys, sons of one of ex-President Roosevelt's rough rider friends living in Oklahoma. Doubtless many a lad in reading about them has regarded the experiences and adventures of these youngsters as the most delightful and desirable that any boy could possibly wish.

What these two other boys can only dream of. They started out alone from Oklahoma on mules and traveled in that manner all the way to New York, 2,300 miles. This was a tremendous undertaking for able-bodied men. At the end of such a journey even a man accustomed to the saddle would have been worn and exhausted. How much greater a strain the trip must have been to children of 3 and 6 years. At 6 years a child is in many ways little more than a baby, and a 3-year-old is only a degree better. To such a tour. The probability is that long before they reached their journey's end their youthful energy had been greatly flagged that the reception to Roosevelt, to take part in which was the object of their trip, was a weariness to them and not the source of keen delight they had anticipated.

The boys are now returning to Oklahoma in automobiles, the younger one with his father, the other driving a machine of his own. A 3,000-mile automobile trip is not undertaken lightly by any persons who have had experience in such travel, for they know the physical weariness and strain it involves. If the beryber boys do not suffer, possibly in a permanent way, by the double demand upon their nervous systems and their young bodies, it will prove that they possess phenomenal strength and power of endurance. Other boys may envy them, but will be forced to look upon them with pity and upon their father as a man who has much to learn.—Editorial in Indianapolis Star.

The recent rains have caused many of the older citizens to go back in memory to the summer of 1875 when it rained for sixty consecutive days, and all crops were greatly damaged. It is to be hoped the rains would not duplicate such a condition.—Ex.

The largest acreage of tobacco is reported as having been planted for many years, although on account of being set late, and with favorable weather conditions there should be more pounds of tobacco raised per acre, yet the quality, no doubt, will be somewhat inferior, says Commissioner of Agriculture Rankin.

So far this month the farmers have done little more than watch the weeds grow in their corn and tobacco fields. Much of the land was badly washed last week by the heavy rains, and in many fields the corn has fallen until it will be impossible to cultivate any more, consequently the outlook for very weedy corn fields this fall was never better.

While the tobacco patches in many instances are very weedy, they will be cleaned out in a few days after the ground dries out enough to be plowed.

Of course it is too early in the season to begin to predict what kind of a crop the tobacco will make, but there are many who believe it will be of poor quality.

There never was more unfavorable weather for the hay and grain harvest than that of this month. Some timothy was cut last week, and it will make a very poor quality of food for stock. Oats were a good crop, but there was no weather suitable in which to save them in first-class condition.

The wheat harvest would have been completed last week had it not been that the frequent rains shut off that work entirely.

Although both are hovering near the age of three score years and ten, George, of Clearmont county, Ohio, and his brother, John Trump, of Taylor, Texas, shed tears of joy when they met at the Union Central Hotel in Cincinnati, last Friday morning.

They had not seen each other since 1864 when John Trump, then a young man, left the family home in Clearmont county, to go to Texas, where he hoped to make a fortune as a rancher.

For fifteen years following the start of the civil war George had no trace of his brother John. Not a word was learned of his whereabouts, and he had not communicated with his family.

Within that time the two brothers had fought through the civil war, one on the side of the union and the other on the side of the confederacy. In one battle, that of Pittsburg Landing, the two brothers faced each other, one as member of the Fifth Ohio Cavalry and the other as a member of a Texas regiment.

John Trump is almost 70 and his brother 68 years of age. The two brothers recognized each other through the medium of pictures, which had been exchanged.

Stops Hair Falling

Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, will certainly stop falling of the hair. Indeed, we believe it will always do this unless there is some disturbance of the general health. Then, a constitutional medicine may be necessary. Consult your physician about this.

Does not change the color of the hair.

Formula with each bottle. Show it to your doctor. Ask him about it, then do as he says.

The reason why Ayer's Hair Vigor stops falling hair is because it first destroys the germs which cause this trouble. After this is done, nature soon brings about a full recovery, restoring the hair and scalp to a perfectly healthy condition.

A Chicago wool commission firm believes that the bottom has been reached in wool prices, and that although probably the market will continue slow and uninteresting for some time, ultimately the demand will become larger and higher prices will prevail. This belief is based on the fact that for five months the mills of the country have bought little wool, and, having been well employed during that period, must necessarily by this time be short on raw material.

Just before daylight, last Monday morning, some animal, supposed to be a dog or a fox, killed 70 chickens for Mr. Jas. D. Cloud, two miles west of town. The chickens were large enough to fry, and were bitten through the back and under the wing. They were left where killed, Mr. Cloud was notified when he went to feed his chickens and found the poultry yard strewn with dead chickens.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumbled upon intrigue when the governor of North and South Carolina allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of the state of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other procure a horseman to scout the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but finds him a prisoner. Griswold and Barbara, while investigating the disappearance of Appleweight, meet Ardmore and Jerry, the latter revealing the presence of Appleweight. Ardmore arrests a man on the property who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested at Appleweight by the South Carolina militia.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Flight of Gillingwater.
"It will be better for me to break the news to Col. Gillingwater," said Jerry, "and you must go and and meet the troops yourself, with Mr. Cooke and that amusing Mr. Collins. There is no telling what effect my tidings will have on Gillingwater, or what he will decide to do. He has never before so near trouble as he is now, and I may have to give him the first aid to the injured when he finds out that the South Carolina troops are on Raccoon creek, all ready to march upon our sacred soil."

"But suppose your adjutant general shouldn't go back to his troops after he sees you, then what am I to do?" "If you don't see him by ten o'clock you will take personal command and exercise your own discretion as to the best method of landing Appleweight in a South Carolina jail. After that we must find papa, and it will be up to him to satisfy the newspapers and his constituents with some excuse for his strange disappearance."

Collins had come from Raleigh on the evening train, and he had solemnly assured Ardmore that the present state of affairs could not be maintained another 24 hours. He had exhausted all his professional resources, and the North Carolina newspapers of all shades of opinion were clamoring for the truth, and were insisting that, for the honor and dignity of the state, Gov. Danglefield should show himself in Raleigh.

"We've got to see Danglefield or bust. Now, where is that eminent statesman, Ardmore? You can't tell me you don't know; but if you don't, Mrs. Danglefield does, and she's got to tell."

"She hasn't the slightest idea, but if the newspapers find out that he's really and truly missing, he will have to show up; but first we've got to take Appleweight off that case of Chateau Bluet and lodge him in the jail at Turner Court House, and let our horse have the odium of incarcerating the big chief of the border, to whom he is under the greatest political obligations."

"But it's all over the country now that Osborne hasn't been seen in Columbia since he and Danglefield fled that row in New Orleans. Cranks are turning up everywhere, pretending to be governors of various states, and old Danglefield is seen on all the outgoing steamers. There's been nothing like it since the kidnapping of Charley Ross."

Ardmore drew on his riding-goggles reflectively, and a delighted grin illuminated his countenance.

"I caught a lunatic down on the Raccoon this afternoon who said he was the governor of South Carolina, and I looked him up."

"Well, he may be Osborne," remarked Collins, with journalistic suspicion.

"And he may be a Swiss admiral or the king of Mars. I guess I'm a governor myself, and I know what a governor looks like, and acts like—you can't fool me. I put this lunatic where he'll have a chance to study astronomy to-night."

"Then he isn't on that case of Chateau Bluet with Appleweight?"

"No; I looked him in a corn-crib until I got time to study his credentials. Some along now!"

Ardmore, Collins and Cooke rode rapidly away through the wide gates of the estate along the Sapphire road, over which, by his last bulletin, the adjutant general of North Carolina had marching his troops. They had left Cooke's men with Paula's footmen to guard the house and to picket the banks of Raccoon in the immediate neighborhood of the camp of the South Carolinians.

"I guess those fellows can hold 'em off," murmured Cooke. "We've got to make up the whole business by tomorrow night. You can't have two states at war with each other this way without shaking up the universe, and if federal troops come down here to straighten things out it won't be funny."

They had ridden about a mile, when Cooke checked his horse with an exclamation.

"There's somebody coming like the devil was after him. It must be Gillingwater."

They drew rein and waited, the quick patter of hoofs ringing out sharply in the still night. The moonlight gave them a fair sweep of the road, and they saw a horseman galloping rapidly toward them.

"Lordy, the man's on fire!" gasped Ardmore.

"By George, you're right!" muttered Collins, moving nervously in his saddle. "It's a human submersible!"

"It's not a submarine," explained the practical Cooke.

"Seeing three men drawn across the road, the horseman began to check his flight."

"Men!" he shouted, as his horse pawed the air with its forefeet, "is this the road to Kildare?"

"Right you are," yelled Cooke, and the rider, aware of a flash, a glitter that startled and dazzled the eye, and Col. Rutherford Gillingwater thundered on.

They rode on and saw presently the lights of campfires, and a little later were ceremoniously halted at the roadside by an armed guard.

It had been arranged that Collins, who had once been a second lieutenant in the Georgia militia, should be presented as an officer of the regular army, and a special aide to Gov. Danglefield during the encampment, and that in case Gillingwater failed to return promptly he should take command of the North Carolina forces.

An open field had been seized for the night's camp, and the tents already shot up in the moonlight. The three men introduced themselves to the militia officers, and Collins expressed their regret that they had missed the adjutant general.

"Gov. Danglefield wished you to move your force on to Ardley should we fail to meet Col. Gillingwater; and you had better stir your tents and be in readiness to advance in case he doesn't personally return with orders."

Capt. Collins, as he had designated himself, apologized for not being in uniform.

"I lost my baggage train," he laughed, "and I don't know where it is, so I'm not in uniform. I'm a little out of uniform, but I'm not in uniform."

"Appleweight!" exclaimed the group of officers in amazement.

"None of your business, the great Appleweight!" responded Collins. "The governor has him in his own hands at last, and is going to carry him across the border and into a South Carolina jail, as a little pleasure to the governor of South Carolina."

The militia officers gave the necessary orders for breaking the halt.

Collins had come from Raleigh on the evening train, and he had solemnly assured Ardmore that the present state of affairs could not be maintained another 24 hours. He had exhausted all his professional resources, and the North Carolina newspapers of all shades of opinion were clamoring for the truth, and were insisting that, for the honor and dignity of the state, Gov. Danglefield should show himself in Raleigh.

wardened the sleeping driver on the wagon with a roar, and himself leaped over the box and began turning the horses.

"What do you think he's doing?" asked Cooke.

"He's in a hurry to get back to mother's cooking," replied Ardmore. "He's seen Miss Danglefield and learned that she is at Kildare, and is going to get his clothes out of danger. Lordy! Listen to him slashing the mules!"

"But you don't think—" "The wagon had swung round, and already was in rapid flight. Collins howled in glee.

"Come on! We can't miss a show like this!"

"Leave the horses then! There's a hill there that will break his neck. We'd better stop him if we can!" cried Cooke, dismounting.

They threw their reins to the driver of the wagon, who had been brushed from his seat by the impatient adjutant general, and was chanting weirdly to himself at the roadside.

The wagon, piled high with trunks and boxes, was dashing forward, Gillingwater belaboring the mules furiously, and hearing the shouts of strange pursuers, yelled:

"In a voice shrill with fear. 'Come on, boys!' shouted Ardmore, thoroughly aroused, 'catch the spy and traitor!'"

The road dipped down into the shadow of a deep cut, where the moon's rays but feebly penetrated, and where the flow of springs had softened the surface; but the pursuers were led on by the rumble of the wagon, which swung from side to side perilously, the boxes swaying about noisily and toppling threateningly at the apex.

Down the sharp declivity the wagon plunged like a ship bound for the bottom of the sea.

The pursuers bent gamely to their task in the rough road, with Cooke slightly in the lead. Suddenly he shouted warningly to the others, and something rose darkly above them like a black cloud, and a trunk fell with a mighty crash only a few feet ahead of them. The top had been shaken off in the fall, and into it head first plunged Ardmore.

"There's another coming!" yelled Collins, and a much larger trunk struck and split upon a rock at the roadside. Clothing of many kinds strewn the highway. A pair of trousers, swung fiercely into the air, caught on the limb of a tree, shook free like a banner, and the pursuers were startled against the stars.

Ardmore crawled out of the trunk, screaming with delight. The fragrance of toilet water broke freshly upon the air.

"It's his ammunition!" bawled Ardmore, rubbing his head where he had struck the order of a tray. "I scent bottles are smashed, and it's only by the grace of Providence that I haven't cut myself on broken glass."

They went down the road, stumbling now and then over a bit of debris from the vanished wagon.

"I'm walking on carpet," observed Cooke, picking up a feathered road shoe. "There were shoes here so many clothes in all the world."

They abandoned the idea of further pursuit on reaching a trunk standing on end, from which a uniform dress-coat drooped sadly.

"This is not our trouble; it's his trouble. I guess he's struck a smooth road. We'd better go back," said Cooke.

In a moment they had climbed the hill and were in hot pursuit of the adjutant general's abandoned baggage.

Southern Gold and Southern Cotton. Before 1849 the south furnished the chief gold fields of the country, but since that date the south has not been in the running. This section has been outclassed by California, by Colorado by Nevada, and last but not least by Alaska. In the last fiscal year Alabama produced gold to the value of $41,200 and silver to the value of $200. This state was outranked in gold production by the order of the North Carolina, Georgia, and South Carolina, but no one of them turned out enough gold to make the round figure of $100,000. The entire production of gold in the south in the last year was $256,400 and $273,000 in silver. Nearly all the silver was mined in Texas.

It is pretty plain that Alabama and all the rest of the south can get more gold out of the soil via the cotton boll than it can dig out in the gold mines proper. The climate and the soil can in that way be coined into gold. The method is a trifle more circuitous, but it yields in cotton alone more money than it does in all the gold fields in the country, for the total yield of gold in the last fiscal year in this country was but $94,560,000—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Woodpecker's Foresight. In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception.

But he does not eat the acorn, for as a rule he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results, for he is a reasoner, and not an instinct. The succeeding winter the acorn remains intact, but becoming saturated are predisposed to decay when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food.

It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time when the ground, being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.

Controlled Newspapers. The advertiser knows that no advertiser has ever tried to control its editorial policy, the result being controlled by the charge often made nowadays, that the big advertisers direct the editorial policy of newspapers.

The experience of the Globe is the experience of most newspapers. The advertiser who desires a great deal of editorializing is more interested in the circulation department of a newspaper than in the editorial department. If a daily paper goes to the homes of the people, and is read by them, he is satisfied, and it may chase after any theory or ideal, for all he cares. He has troubles of his own, and he isn't trying to shoulder those of the editorial brethren.

There are newspapers controlled by people outside of the editorial rooms, and a good many of them, more the pity; but the people exercising that control are not the business men who pay their money for advertising space. The newspapers which are established for political purposes are often controlled by chronic office-seekers, whose first concern is their own interests. There are newspapers controlled by great corporations, and the voices of such newspapers are heard in the reform.

The average western newspaper usually is controlled by its owner, and he is supposed to be in duty bound to make all sorts of sacrifices at all sorts of times; there are people who consider it their duty to assist his advertisers, just to show that he is free and independent. If he shows a decent respect for his patrons, who pay him their money, and make it possible for him to carry on the business, he is "subsidized" or "controlled." The newspaper owner is a business man, like the dry goods man or the grocer. The merchants are expected to have considerations for their customers, and they are not supposed to be subsidized by the man who spends five dollars with them, but the publisher is expected to demonstrate his courage by showing that he is ungrateful for the patronage of his friends. It is a funny combination when you think it over—Emporia Gazette.

What's the Answer? We're ready to quit! After sending two perfectly rhymed, carefully scanned, pleasurable sentimental pieces of poetic junk to seventeen magazines and having them returned seventeen times, we turn to the current issue of a new monthly and find a "pome" modeled after Kipling's "Vampire," and in which home is supposed to rhyme with alone, run on page eleven with all the swell curlyques orderly surrounding a place that real art. It is nothing but a piece of trash, but this poet's must have been. As for us, we are on our way to the woodshed to study the psychology of the six or any other old thing that hasn't to do with selling poetry to magazines.

It is a Mistake Many have the idea that anything will sell if advertised strong enough. This is a great mistake. True, a few sales might be made by advertising an absolutely worthless article but it is only for a few months and again and again that pays. An example of the big success of a worthy article is the enormous sale that has grown up for Cascarets Candy Cathartic. This wonderful record is the result of great merit successfully made known through persistent advertising and the month-to-month recommendation given Cascarets by its friends and users.

Like all great successes, trade pirates prey on the unsuspecting public, by marketing fake tablets similar in appearance to Cascarets. Care should always be exercised in purchasing well advertised goods, especially an article that has a national sale like Cascarets. Do not allow a substitute to be palmed off on you.

Well, Wasn't He Right? The minister was addressing the Sunday school. "Children, I want to ask you to make a firm decision about one of the most wonderful, one of the most important organs in the whole world," he said. "What is that that throbs away, beats away, never stopping, never ceasing, whether you wake or sleep, night or day, week in and week out, month in and month out, year in and year out without any volition on your part, hidden away in the depths, as it were, unseen by you, throbbing, throbbing rhythmically all your life long?" During this pause for oratorical effect a small voice was heard: "I know. It's the gas meter."

Those Awful Roaches. They sneak out on the kitchen sink and look at you slyly sometimes. Don't fret your life away dusting powders in the crevices and buying insecticides. Make a hot soda with Maay Task soap and go after that sink. Mr. Roach and his family thrive where things are not clean, and it is hard to clean the cracks and crevices with ordinary yellow soap—it is impossible! Easy Task soap makes roaches hunt other quarters. It keeps them out of woodens, too, if you use it in your laundry.

Looked Like a Pattern. "My dear," asks the thoughtful husband, "did you notice a large sheet of paper with a lot of diagrams on it about my desk?"

"You mean that big piece with dots and curves and diagonals and things all over it?"

"Yes. It was my map of the path of Halley's comet. I wanted to—" "My goodness! I thought it was that pattern I asked you to get, and the dressmaker is cutting that new dress shirtwaist by it!"—Chicago Evening Post.

He Rosa to It. "Do you know," said a little boy of five to a companion the other day, "my father and I know everything. What I don't know my father knows, and what my father don't know I know."

"All right! Let's see, then," replied the older child, skeptically. "Where's Asia?"

It was a stiff one, but the youngster never faltered.

"Well, that," he answered coolly, "is one of the things my father knows."—Harper's Bazar.

He Had Been Observing. "Why don't you call your invention the 'Bachelors' Button?" I asked my friend, who was about to put on the market a button that a man could attach without needle or thread.

"I fear that the appellation would imply too much restrictiveness," he answered. "You see, we went on, giving me one of his knowing smiles, 'I expect to do just as much business with the married men as with the bachelors.'"

At the Summer Resort. "I think I've seen you before some where."

"Yes, I think so. Let's see, you and I were engaged to be married four seasons ago, wasn't we?"

Unfattering Truth. A Chicago physician gleefully tells a child story at his own expense. The five children of some faithful patients had measles, and during their rather long stay in the improvised home hospital they never failed to greet his daily visit with pleased acclamation. The good doctor felt duty fastened, but rashly pressed in the children, in the days of convalescence, for the reason of this sudden affection. At last the youngest and most indiscreet let slip the better truth.

"We felt so sick that we wanted awfully to do something naughty, but we were afraid to be bad for fear you and the nurse would give us more horrid medicine. So we were awfully glad to see you, always, 'cause you made us stick out our tongues. We stuck 'em out awful far!"

Cost of Spontaneity. "I want the office, of course," said the aspiring statesman, "but not unless I am the people's choice."

"We can fix that, too," said his campaign manager. "Only you know it's a good deal more expensive to be the people's choice than it is to go in as the compromise candidate."

YOUNT UNIFORMITY IS HIT BY EDUCATORS
Ohio Teachers' Association Adopts Strong Resolution Against State Uniformity of School Books.
Cedar Point, O., —Educators of Ohio to the number of 2,000 attended the annual meeting of the Ohio State Teachers' Association here. The session was marked by two important incidents—the teachers refused to listen to an address on equal suffrage and they took unanimous action against state uniformity of school books.
During the last session of the legislature the Yount uniformity bill was passed by the senate and was lost in the house. The educators of Ohio do not want uniformity considered again and they voice their protest in the following strong resolution:
"We believe that the educational value of school processes and practices should be paramount to every other consideration. We are therefore opposed to all efforts which would aim to establish a system of State Uniformity in the selection of text-books, because we believe that such a system would be a hindrance to the most enlightened progress of our schools."

The Miser of Sag Harbor.
"Economy," said Daniel W. Field, the millionaire shoe manufacturer of Boston, who at the age of forty-five has entered Harvard, "economy is essential to wealth, but by economy I don't mean parsimony."
"Too many men fail to attain to wealth because they practise a cheeseparing and mean economy that gets everybody down on them."
"They practise, in fact, an economy like that of old William Brewster of Sag Harbor, William, you know, would never buy oysters because he couldn't eat shells and all."

A BURNING ERUPTION FROM HEAD TO FEET
"Four years ago I suffered severely with a terrible eczema, being a mass of sores from head to feet and for six weeks confined to my bed. During that time I suffered continual torture from itching and burning. After being given up by my doctor I was advised to try Cuticura Remedies. After the first bath with Cuticura Soap and application of Cuticura Ointment I enjoyed the first good sleep during my illness. I also used Cuticura Remedy and the treatment was continued for about three weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about the house, entirely cured, and have felt no ill effects since. I would advise any person suffering from any form of skin trouble to try the Cuticura Remedies, and I know what they did for me. Mrs. Edward Nennig, 1112 Salina St., Watertown, N. Y., Apr. 11, 1908."

Midas.
Midas had come to that point in his career where everything he touched turned to gold.
"What shall you ever do with the stuff?" asked his entourage in visible alarm.
Midas affected not to be uneasy.
"Just wait till the boys begin to touch me!" quoth he, displaying an acquaintance with economic tendencies far in advance of his age.—Puck.

Watch Your Refrigerator.
You'll save many a doctor's bill by watching your refrigerator. Keep it absolutely clean all the time. The best way to clean it is to take clean hot water, make a soda with Easy Task soap and wash every nook and corner in the ice box or refrigerator. Then the food doesn't get smelly and carry disease germs to the table. Easy Task soap, being made of pure cocoanut oil, borax, naphtha and clean tallow, is antiseptic as well as cleansing. It is a wonderful soap—and a nickel a cake.

Tactful.
A woman with a pronounced squint went to a fashionable photographer.
He looked at her and she looked at him and both were embarrassed.
He spoke first.
"Won't you permit me," he said, "to take your portrait in profile? There is a certain shyness about one of your eyes which is as difficult in art as it is fascinating in nature."—Beacon.

Aristic Temperament.
"Hamlet seemed to speak with authority in his advice to the players."
"Yes," replied Mr. Stormington Barnes, "although he was rather quiet and patient. But in his other scenes he was as nervous and irascible as a regular stage manager."

ROOSEVELT RETURNS AND IS GIVEN AN OVATION SELDOM EQUALED
The Mighty Traveler Goes Buoyantly Through a Long and Trying Reception-Parade, Showing Lively Interest in Everything American
The White Company Receives Unique Compliment for the Sturdy Reliability of Its Steam Car
From Mr. Roosevelt and Family

Theodore Roosevelt and Party in White Steamer.)
After fifteen months' absence, exactly as scheduled, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt disembarked from the Kal-sernia around Victoria, Saturday morning, June 15, at 11 a. m. To the keen disappointment of a large group of newspaper correspondents, Mr. Roosevelt absolutely refused, as heretofore, to be interviewed or to talk on political subjects, but his rapid fire of questions showed the same virile interest in public affairs as before.
If the welcome tendered by the vast throng may be considered a criterion upon which to base a "return from exile," surely there was no discordant note in the immense reception-parade, nor in the wildly clamorous crowd which cheered at every glimpse and hung on his every word.
The incidents of the day in New York were many, but perhaps none better illustrated the nervous energy and vitality of the man, the near-man-to be up-and-doing, which he has brought back to us, than the discarding of horses and carriages for the swifter and more reliable automobiles.
The moment the Roosevelt family and immediate party landed, they were whisked away in White Steamers to the home of Mrs. Douglas Robinson at 433 Fifth avenue. A little later, when the procession reached the corner of Fifty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, Colonel Roosevelt again showed his preference for the motor car in general and the White cars in particular, when he, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Collector Loeb transferred from their cat-riage to White Steamers, which were in waiting for them.
After luncheon at Mr. Robinson's house, the entire party, including Colonel Roosevelt, again entered White cars and were driven to Long Island City, where they were to take a special train to the ex-President's home at Oyster Bay.
The supremacy of the White cars with the Roosevelt party was again demonstrated on Sunday, when the party was driven to church in the White Steamers, and a group of some forty prominent Rough Riders were taken in a White Gasoline Truck to be clubmates at the Travlers' Island Clubhouse of the New York Athletic Club.

Trying to Satisfy Him.
Squeamish Guest (as water places water before him)—Waiter, are you sure this is boiled distilled water?
Waiter—I am positive, sir.
Squeamish Guest (putting it to his lip)—But it seems to taste pretty hard for distilled water.
Waiter—That's because it's hard-boiled distilled water, sir.

bonated in bottles—50 everywhere.

The pooled wool of Pendleton and Kenton counties was sold to M. Sabel & Son of Louisville at 25 cents per pound for the best and 20 cents per pound for the common. The two counties had about forty thousand pounds of very fair wool, and the delivery was made at Walton on Tuesday.

Daniel Sabel and G. D. Dale, of Louisville, receiving it for their firm. There were no exceptions to the wool of any consequence and all of the farmers appeared to be pleased with every part of the transaction.

Judge J. G. Tomlin spent last week at Owensboro, holding a special term of the Owen circuit court and rehearing some of the tax suit cases of Owen county. One judgment he rendered holds ex-Sheriff Alexander of Owen county, responsible to the county of Owen for over $18,000 for taxes, etc., collected and never accounted for to the county. The suits have been on hand a long while and this is one of the closing chapters of a nasty lot of business that has made very disagreeable feeling in Owen county, and the trial judge had a difficult task to conduct the cases with a spirit of fairness.

Judge Tomlin seems to have accomplished that from the tenor of his opinion.

The Instructor, Prof. J. C. Gordon, of Eminence, was introduced by Superintendent Riley, and he proceeded to outline the course he would pursue in conducting the Institute.
"Writing" was discussed first by the Instructor, who in answering questions asked by Miss Dolph, said that "pen and ink should be put in the hands of the pupils who have reached the third grade. For practical purposes use the muscular movement. Copy books, pens and ink should be in charge of the teacher when not in use. The Superintendent endorsed the last answer, and advised the teachers who have no place to put books, ink, etc., to get a good box, and arrange it so such things can be cared for properly.
"Prof. Dix gave a good talk on artistic arrangement, uniformity and accuracy in writing. Mrs. Wood said she had good success in having the pupils analyze each letter. In summing up the subject, the Instructor said, "praise the good, but do not be too hasty to condemn the blot, etc."
The afternoon session was opened by singing the "Swanee River." Supt. Riley then put the motion to have a critic, but it was lost. The Superintendent then gave a lengthy talk on the value of keeping a record of the most important acts of every day life. "Arithmetic" was introduced by Miss Nannie Hamilton, followed by Miss Lily Rouse and Adela Roberts. Miss Hamilton thought best to devote most time to the parts of Arithmetic that would be of most value to us in after life. Prof. Omer Dix and Miss Katie Craig also took part in this discussion. The "Battle Hymn of the Republic" was sung after recess, when the Instructor resumed the subject of "Arithmetic." He advised the use of aids, such as the pint cup, the quart cup, etc., as by these the pupils would learn more rapidly and accurately. He said in our illustrations in measurement on the relative position should be kept in their proportion. Use the 6 per cent. method in interest. The Instructor also gave a good illustration of how to develop the rule for finding the area of a circle. Go slow in this branch.

TUESDAY.

The Institute was called to order by the Superintendent. "Home, Sweet Home" was sung, and was followed by different exercises. The Institute was called to order by the Superintendent. Prof. E. L. Dix gave a good illustration on the board by drawing different objects to show how he conducts opening exercises. We can say that by the Professor's diagram, attention can be had and much good accomplished in morals.

"Spelling" was introduced by Katie Craig, followed by Josie Madgett and Helen Dickey. The Instructor said the important points should be spent on the prefixes, affixes, and on the third critical marks up to the fourth grade.

After recess "Reading" was introduced by Helen Dickey. The Instructor said the word method to the second grade, then the third grade, and recommended books on Nature Study for supplementary reading.
The afternoon session began by singing "Rock of Ages." Prayer by Prof. Dix.
Paul B. Harrison, Jr., of the Ky. Children's Home was present, and gave a short talk in regard to the orphan of the State, and thought great help could be derived for the Home if the teachers would set aside one afternoon between November 1st and December 25th, 1910, for the observance of Kentucky Children's Home Day, and have children and parents contribute to the Kentucky Children's Home Society. This was endorsed by Superintendent Riley, who said he would give $3 worth of books to the school giving the largest donation.

Language and Composition had been assigned to Anna Cleek, Prof. Ogden, Mrs. Corbin, Prof. Ratcliff, Nannie Hamilton and Lily Rouse, and each responded with a lengthy talk, and much information was imparted by Miss Hamilton's outline. The Instructor continued the subject with a good talk and much information was acquired.

WEDNESDAY.

The Institute was called to order by the Superintendent. Song, "Work for the Night is Coming." Scriptural reading by the teachers. Devotional exercises by the teachers.
Prof. Dix gave another of his famous talks, and by illustrations on the board causes the information gained to live long on the mind. He said, "Boys and girls are we? and we must study each individual and apply the remedy that is suited to each."
Physiology was introduced by Miss Ida Hodge, who was followed by Mrs. Wood, who gave an illustration on the board of the Digestive System showing the different organs and explaining their use. The Instructor concluded the subject by emphasizing the care of eye and ear, as these are the main organs in receiving information.

The subject of the County High School was taken up after recess, and was discussed by the Superintendent, Prof. Dix, Nannie Hamilton, the latter receiving generous applause at the conclusion of her remarks.

The Superintendent gave a talk on the relation of a High School to a Graded School. The principals of the Graded Schools who were present took part in the discussion, followed by the Instructor who said that the ratio of a person completing the common school in making money to the person without an education was in the ratio of 21 to 1; of a High School graduate, 92 to 1; of a college graduate, 57 to 1; of a university graduate, 200 to 1.

The afternoon session was begun by singing "Rock of Ages." History was introduced by A. M. Yealy, who was followed by L. C. Campbell, Mrs. Dix, Mrs. Craig, Lily Rouse, Etna McAttee, Prof. Jolly, of Bedford, Trimble county, also took part in the discussion, and gave a history of the English language.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Major Griswold, who were intriguers when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of the South Carolina. While Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Danglefield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the actors are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other proscribed. Both have forces scouting the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but Jerry finds him and takes him to Ardmore, her own prisoner. Griswold and Barbara, while investigating the outlaw's disappearance, meet Ardmore and Jerry, the latter revealing the presence of Appleweight. Ardmore arrests a man on his property who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested as Appleweight by the South Carolina militia. The North Carolina militia is called into action. When Gillespie, Jerry's fiancé, finds that real war is afoot, he flees.

CHAPTER XVII.

On the Road to Turner's.

"Who goes there?"

"A Jug."

"What kind of a Jug?"

"A little brown Jug from Kildare." Thus Mr. Thomas Ardmore tested his pickets with a shibboleth of his own devising. The sturdy militiamen of North Carolina patrolled the northern bank of Raccoon creek at midnight, aware that riotous flood alone separated them from their foes. The terraces at Ardley bristled with the guns of the First Light battery, while, upon a cot in the wine cellar beneath, Mr. Bill Appleweight, alias Folsot, slept the sleep of the just.

He was rudely aroused, however, at one o'clock in the morning by Ardmore, Cooke and Collins, and taken down the kitchen to the stable where the Ardley farm wagon. Big Paul held the reins, and four of Cooke's detectives were mounted as escort. Ardmore, Cooke and Collins were to accompany the party as a board of strategy in the movement upon Turner's Court House, South Carolina.

Appleweight, the terror of the border, blinked at the lanterns that flashed about him in the courtyard. He had been numbed by his imprisonment, and even now he yielded himself docilely to the inevitable. His capture in the first instance at Mount Ararat had been a surprise. He could have placed his hand on the men who did it if he had been free for a couple of hours. This he had pondered over his solitary confinement as he sat on the case of Chateau Bizet in the Ardley wine cellar; but the subsequent events had been too much for him. He had been taken from his original captors by a girl, and while the ignominy of this was not lost on the outlaw, his wits had been unequal to the further fact, which he had no ground for doubting, that this captivity was all the more to him, as he had been due to a daughter of that very governor of North Carolina whom he had counted his friend.

"The road between Kildare and Turner's is fairly good," announced Cooke, "though we've got to travel four miles to strike it. Griswold evidently thinks that holding the creek is all there is of this business, and he won't find out till morning that we've crawled round his line and placed Appleweight in jail at Turner's, where he belongs."

"You must have a good story ready for the press, Collins," said Ardmore. "The North Carolina border counties don't want Appleweight injured, and Gov. Danglefield don't want any harm to come to him—you may be sure of that, or Bill would have been doing time long ago."

"Gentlemen, it was very impolite of you not to tell me you were ready to start!" and Jerry came briskly from the side entrance, dressed for the saddle and nibbling a biscuit.

"But you are not to go!" I thought that was understood!" cried Ardmore. "It may have been understood by you, Mr. Ardmore, but not by me!" he should never forgive myself if, after all the trouble I have taken to straighten out this little matter, I should not be in at the finish. Will you kindly get me a horse?"

"Miss Danglefield's restoration was not to be shaken, and a few minutes later the party moved out from the courtyard. Cooke rode several hundred yards ahead; then two detectives preceded the wagon, in which Appleweight sat on a cross-seat with two more of Cooke's men on a seat just behind him. He was tied up, and an old derby hat (supplied by Paul) had been slipped upon the side of his head at an angle that gave him a queer look as he rode.

derment, resignation and impotent rage. Beside the wagon rode Miss Jerry Danglefield, alert and contented. Ardmore and Collins were immediately behind her, and she indulged the journalist in some mild chaff from time to time, to his infinite delight, though considerably to Ardmore's distress of heart; for, though no words had passed between him and Jerry as to the disgraceful flight of the adjutant general, yet the master of Ardley was in a jealous mood. The moon had left the conspirators to the softer radiance of the stars, but there was sufficient light for Ardmore to mark the good lines of Jerry's face as she lifted it now and then to scan the bright globes above.

Paul drove his team at a trot over the smooth road of the estate to a remote and little-used gate on the southern side, but still safely removed from the South Carolina pickets along the Raccoon.

"It's all right over there," remarked Collins, jerking his head toward the creek. "The fronting armies are waiting for morning and battle. I suppose that when we send word to Griswold that Appleweight is in a South Carolina jail, he'll change his mode of operations. It will then be Gov. Osborne's painful task to dance between law-and-order sentiment and the loud cursing of his border constituents. The possibilities of this rumper grow on Ardmore."

"There is no rumper, Mr. Collins," said Jerry over her shoulder. "The governor of North Carolina is merely giving expression to his civic pride and virtue."

Leaving Ardley, they followed a diamond stretch of road until they reached the highway that connects Turner's and Kildare. "It's going to be morning pretty soon. We must get the prisoner into Turner's by five o'clock. Trot 'em up, Paul," ordered Cooke.

They were all in capital spirits, with a fairly good road before them, leading straight to Turner's, and with no expectation of any trouble in landing their prisoner safely in jail. They were well into South Carolina territory now, and were jogging on at a sharp trot, when suddenly Cooke turned back and halted the wagon.

"There's something coming—wait!"

"Maybe Bill's friends are out looking for him," suggested Collins. Cooke impatiently bade them be quiet.

"If we're accosted, what shall we say?" he asked.

"Well," replied Jerry instantly, "that one of the laborers at Ardley is dead, and that we are taking his remains to his wife's family at Turner's. I shall be his grief-stricken widow."

The guards already had Appleweight down on the floor of the wagon, where one of them sat on his feet to make sure he did not create a disturbance. At her own suggestion Jerry dismounted and climbed into the wagon, where she sat on the side board, with her head deeply bowed as though in grief.

"Pretty picture of a sorrowing widow," mumbled Collins. Ardmore punched him in the ribs to make him stop laughing. To the quick step of walking horses ahead of them was now added the whisper and creak of leather.

"Hello, there!" yelled Cooke, wishing to take the initiative.

"Hey-oi!" answered a voice, and all was still.

"Give up the road; we're taking a body into Turner's to catch the morning train," called Cooke.

"Who's dead?"

"One of Ardmore's Dutchmen. Shipping the corpse back to Germany."

The party ahead of them paused as though debating the case.

The north-bound party was a blur in the rear. Their horses snuffed and moved restlessly about as their riders conferred.

"Give us the road!" shouted Cooke. "We haven't much time to catch our train."

"Who did you say was dead?"

"Karl Schmidt," returned Paul promptly.

Ardmore's heart sank, fearful lest an inspection of the corpse should be proposed. But at this moment a wall, eerie and heart-breaking, rose and fell diamally upon the night. It was Jerry mourning her dead husband, her over his body in an abandon of grief.

"De poor vidow—she be mit us," called out big Paul, forsaking his usual excellent English for guttural dialect.

"Who are you fellows?" demanded Cooke, spurring his horse forward. The horsemen, to his surprise, seemed to draw back, and he heard a voice speak out sharply, followed by a regrouping of the riders at the side of the road.

"We been to a dance at Turner's," called back a voice.

"That seems all right," whispered Ardmore to Collins.

"Thus," muttered Collins, "in the midst of death we are in life, and this, reaching Jerry, caused her to bend over the corpse at her feet as though in a convulsive spasm of sorrow, to add color to their story. Paul rumbled off a few consolatory sentences in German.

"Give us the road!" commanded Cooke, and without further parley they started ahead, closing about the wagon to diminish, as far as possible, the size of the caravan. Paul kept the horses at a walk, as became their errand, and Jerry continued to weep dolorously.

They passed the horsemen at a slight rise in the rolling road. The party bound for Turner's moved steadily forward, the horsemen huddled about the wagon, with Jerry's head bowed, and Ardmore and Collins at the rear. At the top of the knoll hung the returning dancers, well to the left of the road, permitting with due respect the passing of the funeral party. One of them, Ardmore could have sworn, lifted his hat until the wagon had passed. Then some one called good night, and looking back, Ardmore saw them—a dozen men, he judged—regain the road and quietly resume their journey toward Kildare.

"Pretty peaceable for fellows who've been attending a dance," suggested Collins, craning his neck to look after them.

"One fellow lifted his hat as we passed, and I thought—"

"Well, what did you think, Mr. Ardmore?" demanded Cooke impatiently.

"Well, it may seem strange, but I thought there was something about that chap that suggested Grisly."

They paused to allow Jerry to resume her horse, and one of the detectives joined in the conference to venture his opinion that the men they had passed were in uniform. "They looked like militia to me," and as he was a careful man, Cooke took note of his remark, though he made no comment.

But as they moved on toward Turner's, Ardmore was still troubled over what had seemed to him the remarkable parting of the carriage of the carriage reveler who had lifted his hat as the corpse passed. Grisly, he kept saying over and over to himself, was no fool by any manner of means, and he was unable to conjecture why the associate professor of admiralty, known to be detached on special duty for the governor of South Carolina, should be riding to Kildare, unless he contemplated some coup of importance.

The stars paled under the growing light of the early summer dawn. Appleweight, with shoulders heavily drooping, contemplated the tenderly cortège with the gaze of one who not only accepted a condition he does not in the least understand.

A few early risers saw the strange company enter and proceed to the jail; but before half the community had breakfasted, Bill Appleweight, the outlaw, was securely locked in jail in Turner's Court House, the seat of his county, in the state of South Carolina, and the jailer, moreover, was sharing the distinguished captive's thrall.

Stewardship of Wealth. "Well," said the one who sells the liquor, "I will take the egg and treat you to a drink."

"All right," said the farmer. When they came to the tavern he was asked what he would drink to which he replied: "Well, I shall drink sherry with an egg in it."

"Well, I guess not," replied the chauffeur, withering us with scorn. "Why, before I seen countin' a car I was thinkin' o' gettin' specs, my eyesight was that poor I couldn't see the contribution box fr' church until it was so near past me it was too late to dig for any money. But I hadn't been runnin' that wagon two days till I could see a policeman's little fingers stickin' out from behind a tree four miles away. I could even see where if he was standin' in the shade three miles off. Hard on the eyes! Well, not much! It's the best medicine for weak eyes that was ever invented, don't you forget it."

Casey at the Bat.

This famous poem is contained in the Coca-Cola Baseball Record Book for 1910, together with records, schedules for both leagues and other valuable baseball information compiled by authorities. This interesting book sent by the Coca-Cola Co., of Atlanta, Ga., on receipt of 3c stamp for postage. Also copy of their booklet "The Truth About Coca-Cola" which tells all about this delicious beverage and why it is so pure, wholesome and refreshing. Are you ever hot—tired—thirsty? Drink Coca-Cola—it is cooling, refreshing and quenches the thirst. At soda fountains and car bonated in bottles—so everywhere.

Don't Care for Expenses.

They were seated at breakfast table.

"John, dear," said the young wife, "this is my birthday."

"You said you mentioned it, darling," rejoined her husband. "I'll buy you a present the first thing when I get downtown."

"Well," she said, "I hope you won't get any cheap 98-cent affair."

"Of course I won't," he replied. "Why, I would be ashamed to present you with anything that cost less than a dollar."

Back to the Tall Timber.

Alfred—Are you going to pass your vacation at the seashore?

Gilbert—No, thank you. It's the woods for me this year.

Alfred—Don't like the shore, eh?

Gilbert—Oh, I like it well enough, but it's too risky. I passed my vacation there last year and had several narrow escapes.

Alfred—From drowning?

Gilbert—No; summer girls. Seven of them proposed to me.

HARD TO PLEASE

Regarding the Morning Cup.

"Oh how hard it was to part with coffee, but the continued trouble with constipation and belching was such that I finally brought myself to leave it off."

"Then the question was, what should we use for the morning drink? Tea was worse for us than coffee; chocolate and cocoa were soon tired of; milk was not liked very well, and hot water we could not endure."

"About two years ago we struck upon Postum and have never been without it since."

"We have seven children. Our baby now eighteen months old would not take milk, so we tried Postum and found she liked it and it agreed with her perfectly. She is today, and has been, one of the healthiest babies in the State."

"I use about two-thirds Postum and one-third milk and a teaspoon of sugar, and put it into her bottle. If you could have seen her eyes sparkle and hear her say 'good' today when I gave it to her, you would believe me, that she likes it."

"If I was mother of an infant's home, every child would be raised on Postum. Many of my friends say, 'Well, that I owe my good health to God and Postum.'"

"I am writing this letter because I want to tell you how much good Postum has done us, but if you know how I shrink from publicity, you would not publish this letter, at least not over my name."

"Here is a little book, 'The Road to Wellville' in which 'There's a Reason' is given for the use of Postum."

Simple Truth.

You can only do clean washing with clean soap. You know that cocoanut oil, borax and naphtha are natural cleansers and sterilizers and that they can't harm fabrics. Easy Task soap is the only one that combines them scientifically, and for that reason it cuts washday work in two and does the work better than it ever has been done. Ten cents to test it; money back quickly if it is claimed for it.

We live truly in proportion as we go out of ourselves and enter into the fulness of the experience of those whom we serve, and by whom in turn we are served.—Westcott.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Added to the Long List due to This Famous Remedy.

Oronogo, Mo.—"I was simply a nervous wreck. I could not walk across the floor without my heart fluttering and I could not even receive a letter. Every month I had such a bearing down sensation, as if the lower parts would fall out. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me a great deal of good and has also relieved the bearing down and two of them have been greatly benefited by it."—Mrs. MAE McKnight, Oronogo, Mo.

St. Louis, Mo.—"I was bothered terribly with a female weakness and had backache, bearing down pains and pains in lower parts. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound regularly and used the Sensitive Wash and now I have no more troubles that way."—Mrs. AL. HERZOG, 6723 Prescott Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

 Actress—"All right, sir, I'll be more attentive and fix the sweet peas and try to get my lines in the right place."
 Manager—"Your course is very simple. Just mind your peas and cues—Baltimore American."

Confused Impressions.
 "Of course, you know the story of William Tell," said the serious citizen.
 "To tell you the truth," replied Mr. Cumrox, "I'm not clear about him. I can't exactly remember whether he was a great marksman or a famous opera singer."

Not an Objection.
 "I think he'd like to join your club, but his wife wouldn't hear of it."
 "She wouldn't hear of it? Why, I know of half a dozen men who would join our club if their wives couldn't hear of it."

HE RECOGNIZED THE VOICE

And From Remark Made, Also Knew the Party Was Not Engaged in Prayer.

Confidential friends of Louis B. Shields are telling this story about that eminent Republican state convention at Columbus had just adjourned and the Cuyahoga county delegates were all back home when somebody suggested a friendly game of poker. The game was going along right merrily at 2 a. m.

At that hour an officious attendant called up Mr. Shields' residence, which happened to be almost next door.

"This is long distance," said the servant with no warrant of authority whatever. "We are all here in Columbus and can't get home until morning."

"That's all right," came back the reply, but if that voice I hear in the apartment house next door saying 'that's good' isn't Mr. Shields' then I can't recognize a voice when I hear it at night."

And that is the end of the story, for the voice saying "that's good" was indeed that of Mr. Shields, and it was so near home, so the narrator relates, that there was no use in offering a denial—Cleveland Leader.

SOFT, WHITE HANDS

May Be Obtained in One Night.

For preserving the hands as well as for preventing redness, roughness, and chapping, and imparting that velvety softness and whiteness much desired by women Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, is believed to be superior to all other skin soaps. For those who work in corrosive liquids, or at occupations which tend to injure the hands, it is invaluable.

Treatment—Bathe and soak the hands on retiring in a strong hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, and in severe cases spread the Cuticura Ointment on thin pieces of old linen or cotton. Wear during the night old, loose gloves, or a light bandage of old cotton or linen to protect the clothing from stain. For red, rough, and chapped hands, dry, seared, itching, feverish palms, and shapeless nails with painful finger ends, this treatment is most effective. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole proprietors, Boston, Mass.

ONE THING CERTAIN.

"Don you know," shouted the earnest orator, "what to do to the trust?"
 "No, but I know blame well what they're doing to us!" said a man in the front row.

Is Dirt Good for Boys?
 Some folks say: "Oh, let the boy play in the dirt. It is good for him. I wouldn't give a cent for a boy that keeps his clothes clean." That may be all right, but what about the boy's mother? Getting the dirt out of clothes by the use of old-fashioned yellow soap and a slow washday method is hard labor. If the boy's mother uses Easy Task laundry soap, which does half the work for her itself, and which reduces washday labor by fifty per cent, it is different. Easy Task is five cents a cake and is the greatest nickel's worth of soap ever sold.

Novelty.
 "I thought you told me you had something original in this libretto," said the manager, scornfully. "Here at the very outset you have a lot of merry villagers singing, 'We are happy and gay.'"

"You don't catch the idea at all," replied the poet, wearily. "The 'g' is soft. It should be pronounced 'happy and jay.'"

How She Conciliated Them.
 Filmer—How did it happen that those five men who were so angry with the woman in the nickelodeon for not taking off her hat became so friendly with her afterward?
 Screeners—It was raining like fury when the show was over and she invited them to take shelter with her under her hat.

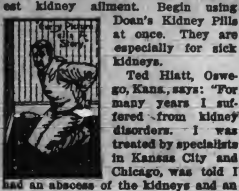

A Mean Man.
 "Is your wife going to Europe this summer?"
 "No. I've bribed a fortune teller to warn her to watch for a slim blonde woman who is coming into my life."

The narrow man hedges in his workman with restrictions, and foolishly expects him to do greater things when denied the right to be himself.

WEAK KIDNEYS WEAKEN THE WHOLE BODY.

No chain is stronger than its weakest link. No man is stronger than his kidneys. Overwork, colds, strains, etc., weaken the kidneys and the whole body suffers. Don't neglect the slightest kidney ailment. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills at once. They are especially for sick kidneys.

Ted Hatt, Oswego, Kans., says: "For many years I suffered from kidney disorders. I was treated by specialists in Kansas City and Chicago, was told I had an abscess of the kidneys and an operation was advised. I thereupon began the use of Doan's Kidney Pills and gradually improved. Soon an operation was unnecessary as my kidneys were well."

She Lives in Binghamville.
 A 50-year-old woman, carrying this ad: "Attractive woman, not a day over thirty, would be pleased to correspond with eligible man. Not absolutely necessary that he should be young, but one with a good paying position would be medium height. The young lady is of medium height, has brown hair and gray eyes, not fat, although, most decidedly, she is not skinny. Her friends say she is a fine looking woman. Object matrimony. Reason for this advertisement, the young woman lives in a little dinky town, where the best catches are the boys behind the counters in the dry goods and clothing stores, and every one of them is spoken for by the time he is out of his short pants. Address Hazel Eyes, Box 23, Binghamville, Mo.—Kansas City Star."

His Claim to Prominence.
 At a social gathering a certain man, intent on knowing every one, was introduced to Senator Julius C. Burrows of Michigan.
 "The name Burrows is very familiar to me," he said. "I am certain that you are a man of some prominence."
 "Yes," replied Senator Burrows. "I am the man that 'died at first' just before Casey came to bat in that celebrated ball game in Mudville."—Success Magazine.

Their Object.
 Banks—The women of my town have formed a secret society.
 Rivers—A secret society? Surely, that's a misnomer; women don't know how to keep secrets.
 Banks—But they know how to tell them, and that's why they formed the society.

The satirist can talk about the "average man" with impunity, because every man considers himself above the average.

And some people have too much respect for other people's homes and not enough for their own.

Highly Esteemed Lady Dies.

The death of Mrs. Benjamin Stephens, Jr., of Florence neighborhood, which occurred on Thursday of last week, cast a gloom over that entire community, where she was highly esteemed by all. Besides the husband she leaves a large family of children, some of them small. The burial took place last Saturday in the family cemetery in the presence of a vast concourse of sorrow-stricken and sympathizing friends and relatives. The deceased was the daughter of the late Robert H. Ingram and a granddaughter of Noah Clure. Mr. Stephens and children have the sympathy of all in the loss of a loving wife and mother.

The Erlanger Fair.

In this issue appears the advertisement of the Kenton County Fair which will be held four days at Erlanger, commencing August 24. The general admission this year is 25c; children, 8 to 12, 15c; horses and vehicles free. The directors are doing all in their power to make this one of the best county fairs in the State and are giving liberal premiums and purses which will insure fine exhibits and good speed races. The half-mile track, one of the best to be found anywhere, will be in excellent condition this year, and some very excellent races will be pulled off, judging from the class of animals whose owners have signified their intention of entering their stock in the speed contests. Altogether indications are that the fair at Erlanger this year will be far superior to any yet held at that place.

Joseph E. Snyder Dead.

In the passing of Joseph Snyder, Carroll county loses one of its best known citizens, a genial, kind hearted man, a loyal friend and neighbor, and an affectionate father. Mr. Snyder died Tuesday evening at the home of his son, Henry, west of Oakley, after a four weeks illness. He was 65 years old and is survived by his wife and seven children, namely: Henry, of Oakley, Earl, of Logansport, William, of Delphi, Mrs. Polly Elder and Mrs. Horatio Blinn, of Star City, and Misses Chessie and Edna, who live at home. Two sisters, Mrs. Jennie B. Gatz and Mrs. Ellen Dennis, of Richmond, and a brother also survive him, the sisters being present at the funeral services. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon, Rev. Ruple, of Buck Creek, officiating—Carroll County (Ind.) Citizen.

Mrs. Snyder, who survives her husband is a daughter of the late H. B. Crisler of this county, and is a sister of Dr. R. H. Crisler, of Lowell, and Ben Crisler, of Petersburg.

Tribute of Respect.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, the Grand Architect of the Universe, in His infinite wisdom, to invade our fraternal circle and call our beloved brother, H. C. Leasing, from labor on earth to refreshments in that celestial lodge above from whose bourn no traveler returns.

Bro. Leasing died at his home near Union, Kentucky, July the 7th, 1910. He was born in Union, Boone county, Kentucky, October 2, 1832, and was the second son of Morris and Mirtha Hamill on Leasing. His father was born August 3, 1800, in Bavaria, Germany, and came to this country in 1834.

At the age of 22 brother Leasing graduated from the Ohio Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, and entered upon the practice of his chosen profession among the people with whom he was raised serving them faithfully and acceptably until five years ago, when he lost his health and became unable to continue. His ability as a man, and successful practice as a physician, was recognized and appreciated by the people and the medical fraternity throughout his extensive acquaintance.

He was made a Mason in 1855, and a Royal Arch Mason in 1865, being an honorary member of Boone Union Lodge No. 301, F. & A. M., at the time of his death, having served with freedom, fortitude and zeal for 55 years.

Bro. Leasing was united in marriage with Miss Annie Coleman, of St. Louis, Mo., December the 1st, 1853. To them, 3 children were born. They are J. M. Leasing, Judge of the Kentucky Court of Appeals; H. C., a prominent Attorney in Nashville, Tennessee; and Mrs. Joseph Collins, of Crittenden, Kentucky; Mrs. Joseph Huey, Union, Kentucky; W. H., officer in the U. S. Navy; and Coleman at home.

Resolved, 1st. That in the death of Bro. Leasing the Lodge loses one of its oldest and most faithful members, as well as one of its wisest counselors, who has inviolately the principles of the Order, carefully observing and preserving the ancient landmarks of the fraternality entrusted to his care, and ever having an attentive ear and in active tongue for those who desired to improve themselves in Masonry. His example is truly worthy of commendation and imitation.

2d. That the county has lost a loyal and patriotic citizen, the community a good friend and neighbor, and the family a noble husband and father.

3d. That we express our heartfelt sympathy to his widow and children in their bereavement, and admonish them to observe and practice the many virtues of a kind, loving, industrious and honored husband, father and friend.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to the Boone County Recorder.

Committee—J. W. Kennedy, Geo. H. Stevenson, M. F. Rouse.

Damage to Crops.

The damage to crops by the wet weather of the past few weeks is beyond comprehension. Corn is flat on the ground, wheat and oats almost ruined, tobacco washed out and freckled by water or smothered by the weeds and grass. Farmers have more than they can attend to in fighting weeds and grass alone.—Carrollton News.

The Old Way.

J. F. Blyth cut his oats with a mower, which is a good way to harvest them when you expect to feed, as it does away, largely, with the use of a cutting box in order to prevent waste by the animals to which they are fed, as the heads are mixed promiscuously with the straw, which prevents a horse from eating the heads alone.

A Pleasant Evening.

Miss Beanie Hall entertained, last Friday evening, with a party in honor of her cousin, Miss Laura Porter, of Hollis, Oklahoma, who is the guest of her cousin, Miss Laura Porter. Among those who responded to invitations were: Misses Jettie and Fatty Revill, Catherine Clements, Jennie Lee Castleman, Mary Roberts, Laura Porter, Laura Pace, Edna Estelle Huey, Messrs. Emil Shearer, Floyd Ryle and David Carter, of Erlanger; Raymond Cropper, of North Bend; Earl and Russell Smith, Garnett and Howard Huey, Wilbur Kealy and Cleveland Snyder. The evening was spent very pleasantly by the young people with plays, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. Refreshments were served about 10 o'clock and about midnight the guests departed for their respective homes, very much delighted with the evening's enjoyments.

Graduating Address.

Of Rev. Edgar C. Riley's address before the graduating class of 20 common school pupils at Warsaw, on Wednesday evening of last week, the Warsaw Independent says:

"The address of the evening—'Leadership—An Ambition for men' by Rev. E. C. Riley, Superintendent of schools of Boone County, was an excellent one, abounding in many alluring and helpful truths. The speaker contrasted the two kinds of leadership—the leadership of the demagogue and that of the statesman—the one and the other, the molding of public opinion to express his own and the other who, independent of all of the trend of popular favor, with conscience rather than future's emotions as his guide—himself seeks to mould public opinion by his advocacy of the fairest, honest thought and the fear of God impels him to believe is right."

About Out of the Hole.

At the beginning of last week farmers were in the worst hole as regarded their work, but the weather that came with the week was exactly what they needed, and all hands, even father, got busy with the weeds and the harvest and an immense amount of work was done by Saturday night. By this time that discouraged look that had been the farmer's for several weeks had about disappeared, because of the better in the crop outlook. As a class farmers are easily discouraged when weather conditions are not adapted to their crops, but a week or ten days in which to exert their muscles freely, generally brings them back to their usual state of independence and satisfaction. To keep farmers thoroughly contented he must have good weather in which, by labor, to create a good appetite and start him on to his farm, enjoy about eight hours slumber out of every twenty-four.

GRANT COUNTY ITEMS.

(Grant County News.)

Reports by precincts show 88 per cent of normal acreage; 62 per cent of a condition equal 52 per cent of a normal crop of tobacco in Grant county.

The Police Court of Williams-town has been very busy during the past week. There have been many drunks and disorderlies and fines have been assessed in many instances.

A house on the farm of Henry Tomlin, about a mile and a half northeast of Williams-town, was burned about 6 o'clock Thursday morning. The house was occupied by Edgar Burroughs. The fire is supposed to have started from the kitchen stove.

Dry Ridge will get her high school after all. The Board of Education last week let the contract for the building to H. J. Northcutt and will commence as soon as Mr. Northcutt can get materials on the ground for the building. Well to do citizens of Dry Ridge personally secured the members of the Board of Education against loss if the building should be erected and the question of its location should get into the courts and a decision adverse to Dry Ridge should be rendered. The new building is to cost about $10,000, and is to have eight rooms.

About one-thirty o'clock Tuesday morning Mrs. Ben Vallandigham, who lives in the W. C. Johnson place near Downingville, awoke and thought she smelled smoke. She woke her husband and discovered that the whole end of the house was on fire. They gathered together their three children and vacated the premises, saving what they could in the way of household furniture and fixtures, but it was not much. The smell of coal oil told the story too plainly. The fire was the result of an incendiary's torch, while the smoldering ruins of a big tobacco barn nearby had been away on the same farm, showed that the fire fiend had been busy earlier in the night.

The house was an old one, but was in a fairly good state of preservation, while the barn was a large one and practically new. So plain was it that the fire was of incendiary origin that the enraged citizens of the community made up a purse for the purpose of securing bloodhounds to track the criminal, but as several hours had passed before the effort to get the hounds had been made it was too late. Several hours longer to get them to the scene of the fire, this project was given up.

As one seems to have any idea as to why the wrath of the incendiary was vented on this particular place, as neither Vallandigham nor the barn is a tenant on the place, nor the owners of it have incurred the enmity of any one.

There is, however, a clue. A few years ago there was a number of incendiary fires in that neighborhood, the fires occurred in old and unoccupied buildings. After a certain resident had been caught peeping in at the window of a neighbor's house one night, was caught by the neighbor and taken sound thrashing, with the warning to keep out of sight, the fires suddenly ceased.

There are those who believe that this last fire was caused by the man who had been taken thrashing, and that he possessed of the mania for setting buildings burning.

Potatoes In The Moon.

Nearly every one, whether city or country bred, has heard that our crop of potatoes depends very largely whether the tubers are planted in the light or dark of the moon. If planted in the light of the moon it is said they will run to tops, and if in the dark they will run to a fine lot of good potatoes. But after exhaustive experiments in the United States Department of Agriculture, it is authoritatively declared, that it makes no difference whatever, whether they are planted in the light or dark of the moon, as the moon's phases have nothing to do with the crop. So long has this superstition been held that Government experts have almost believed that it was not quite a myth; but on making investigation and after the matter out most thoroughly, themselves, they have been obliged to concede that there is absolutely nothing in it.

Discouraging Outlook for Tobacco.

Elmer Conley, carrier on R. D. 2 out of Burlington, makes daily trips through a territory where huge crops of tobacco are produced annually by the farmers, but although they intended to make a considerable effort for a large crop this year, Mr. Conley says, they are along this line are very discouraging, and the plants are small, and in some fields very uneven at that. The corn in the Guanoes and the beans never looked finer. It has a large stalk and the color indicates that it is making a growth that is bound to produce a good yield.

Crops Badly Damaged.

The severe storm of the season swept this section Sunday, and did great damage to crops and property. Some tobacco patches were washed or overblown, corn and oats blown down, and wheat scattered over the fields. Many trees were uprooted. The storm was more severe farther up the river. Judge Donaldson's farm in Hunters Bottom was blown down. This farm is now rented by Mr. Cy Smith. At Carrollton houses were unroofed and things torn up in general.—Milton News.

BASE BALL

The Burlington and Bellevue High School ball teams combined last Saturday afternoon to play the Hebron team at Burlington. Neither team approached sensational ball, but the combination put up the worst article of ball ever witnessed at the park. The boys could neither throw, catch nor bat, and the Hebron players had the easiest snap the team ever went up against, and battered and ran bases until they were exhausted. Among the Hebron boys are several who will make good players and the team that puts one over on them has to keep busy. The score last Saturday afternoon was 33 to 6 in favor of Hebron.

The Burlington team went to Walton, last Saturday, and that afternoon trimmed the team at place 6 to 3. Coffman was batted easily throughout the game by Snyder but his opponents few scattering hits.

The Burlington team will be back next Saturday afternoon at Burlington.

There is a law now in Kentucky that if a man is sixty years old he can be exempt from jury service, although his age does not disqualify him if he wants to serve. The Circuit Court sustains him if he owes to his years and asks to be excused.

So far this season the weeds and grass have been kept pretty well cleaned up all along the main streets in Burlington, and these thoroughfares have presented a much better appearance than usual in summer.

As a result of an opinion handed down by Attorney Gen. Breathitt the vendors of Malt Mead, Cream of Hops, Near Beer and other such drinks in Kentucky will have to pay the State liquor license of $250 for it is held that such beverages do not come under the head of "soft" drinks, inasmuch as they contain a certain per cent. of alcohol.

This is a very busy week with Boone county teachers in the common schools.

AUSPICIOUS OPENING FOR AUTOMATIC LINE

TELEPOST TELEGRAPH SYSTEM INAUGURATES SERVICE TO LOUISVILLE.

Messages Exchanged Between Governors, Mayors and Other Officials of Operating States and Cities—Civic Organizations Join In.

Louisville, Ky.—Marked by the exchange of greetings between prominent state and city officials and the heads of representative civic bodies, the telepost system of automatic telegraphy was formally opened this week between Louisville and Indianapolis.

The cordiality of the welcome extended to this newest marvel in the evolution of telegraphy, with its 3,000 words a minute service, recalled to many of the older residents of the city the "cable of elation" which attended the introduction of the automatic system at No. 318 West Main street where two old men who were present when the first telegraph message was flashed from Louisville by the hand-operated system of Professor Morse. As they saw one automatic message after another rolled off the receiving machines on tapes, at lightning speed, the dramatic spectacle visibly excited them. Marvellous as was the original telegraph, with its sending capacity of 25 words a minute, the speed of this ingenious device for transmitting intelligence between distant points inspired them with a strange feeling.

At the same time that the Telepost messages were being dispatched and received, the Independent Telephone Co. was using the same wire for conversation between subscribers. The ability of the automatic system to use a telephone wire simultaneously with the telephone company while persons are talking over it, without one interfering with the other, gives it an important economic advantage over its rivals, and is one of the novel features of this system which in time will enable it to establish direct telegraph connection with the most remote sections of the country with comparatively little cost.

Aside from the enormous speed of the Telepost, what most impressed those present was the fact that all its messages are transmitted backwards. This insures the infallibility of its wires at all times while messages are in transit.

Present in the office of the automatic company were members of the city council and other local officials of Louisville and a number of prominent business men, including members of the Louisville Commercial club.

The first message sent over the wire was one from the newspapers of Louisville to the editors of newspapers in Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Chicago, Springfield, Ill., St. Louis and Sedalia, Mo., and other cities in which the system has been commercially operating for the past year and a half. The newspapers of the country will be one of the largest beneficiaries by this system, which will give them a much more extended service for the same money their telegraph news now cost them, or the same service for a fraction of the money they now pay for the service of the hand operated system.

Following the greeting from the editors were messages from state officials to state officials of Indiana and Missouri and from the mayor of Louisville to the mayors in all of the operating cities. Then came messages between representative business men and the commercial organizations of Louisville to similar organizations in cities reached by Telepost, felicitating them upon the establishment of this new bond of fellowship between them.

The Telepost is the system by means of which Professor Royinn Hittcock, former curator of the department of science and industries of the Smithsonian institute, testifying recently before a special committee of the New York legislature, said Peary's 8,000-word story of the discovery of the north pole could have been sent from Battle Harbor to the New York Times in ten minutes had it been in operation at that time as far north. It took 20 skilled operators three days to send it by hand. Automatic messages are prepared on a perforating machine. These machines have a regulation typewriter keyboard, but instead of printing the message in Roman letters the keys punch a series of circular perforations in a tape. When these are subjected to electrical contact in the Telepost sending apparatus they automatically create the dots and dashes flashed over the wires to the receiving end. The pulling of a lever sends a message on its way. On the receiving end the message is automatically recorded in dots and dashes on a chemically prepared tape.

Like Cable and Postage, Telepost rates are the same to all sections of the country making a special of that forms of telegrams.

The first is a 50-word letter sent over the wire at any hour of the day or night for 25 cents, with the same celerity as an ordinary telegram and delivered by mail instead of by messenger. The second is a 100-word message, sent over the wire in the regular way, for 10 cents, transcribed on a postal card at the receiving end and delivered by mail. The Telepost—100 words for 25 cents—is intended largely for large business houses. When the message reaches the receiving end the recording tape is placed in an envelope, without any employee of the company reading it, and hurried to the person for whom it is intended by the nearest mail train.

The Most Delicious Bread You Ever Ate

It is now possible to secure right in this town the famous Dolly Bread baked by the Grocers' Baking Company of Louisville.

This bread, fresh from the ovens, is rushed to us by the fast express every morning.

It reaches our store almost as quickly as it reaches the grocers right in Louisville.

Don't fail to give this bread a fair trial tomorrow. Give it the taste test. Serve one loaf of this delicious bread with one loaf of any ordinary bread. Then let the folks at your table decide which is best.

The answer is always certain. They choose

Dolly Bread

For everybody likes bread made with malt and baked in steam. This bread is not baked in the ordinary way. It is baked in steam ovens—superheated to 400 degrees—installed by the Grocers' Baking Company at a cost of thousands of dollars.

Steam is forced into these ovens under enormous pressure—the bread is baked right into the loaf. That is why Dolly Bread tastes so good—that is why it is so easily digested.

"Where's your treasure in, there your heart is also."

"To the girl or boy who receives a diploma, life commences."

"No complete life without moral power as the foundation."

"We should train ourselves for all the good we can do in this world's work."

"Nothing is worth doing that is not worth doing well."

FRIDAY.

The Institute was called to order by the Superintendent.

Song--Work for the Night is Coming.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Supt. McDannell.

The Conductor then discussed Civil Government, and in his remarks said, "that we could find no better book to teach morality and government than the Bible, and the teachers thought the same."

Miss Partridge, teacher in the Normal School at Richmond, was present Thursday and Friday, and gave an interesting talk on the Needs of Kentucky Schools. (We are sure, after hearing her, that each of us to accomplish this in the next two or three years, we will find public school property more attractive, by her plan it can be largely done by teacher and pupils.)

Supt. Riley then gave an hour's talk to the teachers in regard to what would be expected of them during the coming term, emphasizing the necessity of the teacher in seeing that school property was used for proper.

He also presented each teacher with a set of Agricultural books and said this is the starting of your library, which I hope to see every school during the coming term.

After recess, Song--Rock of Ages.

The committee on resolutions and time and place of association meetings reported and this work was then up.

The following resolution were adopted:

1. That we extend our thanks to our ex-superintendents for their presence and encouragement to the common school graduates for the interesting program of Thursday afternoon, and to Mr. McDannell, superintendent of the schools in Gallatin county, for his very appropriate address upon this occasion, and to Miss Partridge for her very helpful talk.

2. That the members of this educational body express to each other their appreciation of the various instructive discussion, and pledge their best efforts for the uplift of education in Boone county.

3. That we appreciate the enthusiastic and effective work of our superintendent, also that we heartily thank him for the books he has furnished the teachers, and hereby pledge ourselves to study and use them to the best advantage.

4. That we try in this way to express in part our high appreciation of our efficient instructor, Mr. J. C. Gordon, for his patient and helpful answers to the many questions, and for his instructive lectures on each subject.

5. That the Institute express by vote of thanks its appreciation of the kind hospitality and courtesy shown by the people of Burlington; we especially thank Mrs. Riddell and Mr. Phipps for the auto rides given the lady teachers, also those residents and visitors who took part in Thursday night's entertainment.

6. That the problem of maintaining in our schoolhouses shall burden neither the purse, the hand nor the head of the teacher.

Committee--Ann May Clerk, Miss Nannie Hamilton, Mr. Oliver Ogden.

The time and place of association meetings will be reported later.

Afternoon the conductor took up the last subject, Hygiene, and gave an interesting talk and improved upon each teacher that good work can only be accomplished by having the buildings clean and attractive.

After remarks by the Superintendent the Institute adjourned.

Your attention is called to the public sale advertisement of John O. Roberts elsewhere in this paper.

Farmers are well up with their work; the weather the past two weeks being exactly what they desired in that line.

Nearly the entire colored population of this part of the county attended a big meeting at Erlanger, last Sunday.

George Hewitt, who has charge of the Baldon threshing equipment, commenced his campaign last Monday. Grover Jarrell is one of the forces that travels with the machine.

If your liver is sluggish and out of tone and you feel dull, bilious, constipated, take a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets tonight before retiring and you will feel bright in the morning. Sold by all dealers.

When the first Monday in August was the annual election day in Kentucky, watermelons were always plentiful on that occasion but the melons do not ripen so soon now. Everything in Kentucky is not yet adjusted to the new constitution.

In a trip out the East Bend road by way of Locust Grove school house to Waterloo, thence to Bellevue by way of McVillie, and then on to Burlington over the pike, very few fields or patches of tobacco are to be seen, and they look as though they will not make one-third of a crop.

Dyspepsia is a dangerous disease, but can be cured; Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by all dealers.

The Teacher—Who was it that climbed slowly to the ladder of success, carrying his burden with him as he went; who, when he reached the top gazed upon those far beneath him, and—
The Scholar (aged 8)—I know, m'am. It was Pat O'Rourke, president of the Hodgekiss union.

An Easy Union
A number of years ago there lived in northern New Hampshire a notorious woman-hater. It was before the day of ready-made clothing, and waiting for a suit, he was obliged to take the material to the village tailor. She took his measurements, and when she cut the coat, made a liberal allowance on each seam.

The man's dislike of women in general prevented his having a fitting fit. He took the finished garment without trying it on. It was much too large, and his disgust was apparent in the answer he made to the friendly loafer on his first visit to the postoffice.
When he wore the despised article,
"Got a new coat, Obed?" said the loafer.

"No, I hain't!" said Obed. "I've got seven yards of cloth cropped round me."—Youth's Companion.

The "Done Up" Shirt Waist Half the looks of a shirt waist depend on the way it is done up. If it is washed with cheap strong yellow soap, so that it gets streaked and stained instead of being cleaned and beautified, it is "done up" sure enough. The woman who values her personal appearance—and that means every woman—will see to it that her shirt waists are laundered with a soap that leaves them white and clean and sweet and new-looking. Easy Task is the only one that will do this. Same price as others—five cents a cake, and the greatest economy to dirt and friend to fabrics ever made.

Immense Saving Possible.
In a preliminary bulletin on the cost of maintaining a tuberculosis sanatorium, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis announces that the average cost per patient per day in thirty semi-charitable sanatoria scattered in all parts of the United States is $1.668. These institutions represent an annual expenditure of over $1,300, 000 and over $15,000 days of treatment given each year. The bulletin, which is part of an extensive study the National association is making for its bureau of information, points out that the country could save annually at least $150,000,000 if the indigent consumptives were properly segregated.

The Deacon's Parable.
A self-conscious and egotistical young clergyman was supplying the pulpit of a country church. After the service he asked one of the deacons, a grizzled, plain-spoken man, what he thought of his morning effort.
"Wait," answered the old man slowly. "I'll tell you in a kind of par-ble. I remember Tunk Weatherbee's fust deer hunt, when he was green.
He followed the deer's tracks all right, but he followed 'em all day in the wrong direction."—Housekeeper.

Advice.
"Father," queried Bob, just home from college, "you've worked for me pretty hard nearly all my life, haven't you?"
"Quite right, quite right, son," mused father retrospectively.
"Just so," returned Bob, briskly.
"Now, you had better get busy and work for yourself a bit—eh, dad?"
—Life.

She's a Free Lancer.
"Would you have a pickpocket arrested if you detected one in the act of going through your pockets?"
"With one exception."
"What's that?"
"Not if it was my wife."

The Requirements of God

HAVE often thought of preaching a sermon on "The Holy Spirit's Second Choice"—not his first, but his second—taking for my text the message of God to the church in Laodicea, "Because thou art lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Hot, the first choice; cold, the second; one thing or another; for or against; out in the open with God, or out in the open against him.

I have often thought of doing this,
but as yet have found no time, writes
Rev. Francis B. Upham, D. D., in the Christian Herald. I have a series on hand that will take all my skill and energy for at least fifty years more.
I have often thought of paying my respective dues to the Holy Spirit, I trust, of the Spirit of God—to the lady man who occasionally comes to hear me;
pleading with him to get up and go where he belongs; to do and dare—it may be for the devil, his master, rather than do or dare nothing for God.

For brethren, there's nothing that stirs me more than lukewarmness—based upon commercial cowardice—the cold-blooded estimate of requirement and reward from a personal standpoint only; nothing that seems to me more foreign to the spirit of well-nigh re-less sacrifice that is in the very heart of the Christian character. For the lady man ever makes his defense. He did so in the time of our Lord, and he does so now. He has the temerity to seek to justify himself—temerity is the word I use today; talk to me tomorrow about this out on the street, and I'll use another. He thinks, he did the shirker in that parable of the talents, that he should be commended for his wisdom. "I know thee," said the servant in this old classic story—"I knew thee that thou art a hard man, and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth; lo, there thou hast that is thine." And Afrail! May God forgive him! Afrail!
And coolly says so! May God pity him! Afrail, and thinking that cowardice can ever be accepted as an excuse! May the good Lord lead him into the light!

God Wants More Than He Gave.
God wants from man more than he gave to him. He gave him life—he wants it back again; he gave him heart power, brain force, the will to conceive and create; he asks for all these gifts and graces to be returned, and, with them, gifts and graces that they have gathered for themselves.

"Touch not the unclean thing. You cannot handle black pitch without being defiled," said an old minister not long ago to a younger one. "That may be," was the answer, "but this gem was in the pitch, and the main thing was not whether my hands were clean, but whether or not they were empty."

"Right you are," said a rough old cattle leader who heard the conversation. "Next to having the marks of the atoning blood upon my hands, I'd like the scars and the stains that come through the attempt to save a sinner from his wretchedness."

His Love Unknown to Many.
The sin of inactivity, let me say, in the second place, is based upon a misconception of God's character. "I know thee," said the servant, "that thou art a hard man—hard man—reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed." But was he? He gave to the servant a good start in life—a good share of his own property. He gave to him absolute freedom and unlimited opportunity. It was his own country that he went, and it was not until after a long time that he returned. He took into consideration his native capacity. To each one he gave "according to his several ability"

—to the brilliant man, five talents; to the man of average ability, two; and to the poor fellow who had never done much, and of whom little should be required, one. He was ready with a hearty welcome. The man who brought back two talents heard the same cheery commendation that the man had won five talents heard.
The man of one talent might have heard the same. And yet, the servant calls the "Master" a "hard man!"

So I say, God is not known. His thoughts, his love, his tender interest in the small details of even a petty life, are no more known to many of us than the divine deliberation before the fall. Even the saint knows not God. Men who have centuries of the activity of Jesus Christ to learn from, men who have their own Christian experience, read their New Testament, study every day, and dare to stand in Christ's stead and beseech men to be reconciled to God—even the saints do not know him yet. Men who think that they are commissioned to analyze the brilliancy of God's sunlight see through a glass, darkly.

"Your God is my devil," said a great preacher a hundred years ago to a man who wore holy livery. A hundred years from now, when people read what some of us called to be sane as well as saints—seriously proposed to hold as unshaken truth, men will say of us the same.

LEADING MISTAKES Writer Has Recorded Type of Which Most of Us Assuredly Have Our Share.

Some of us may be glad to be told that there are only 10 life mistakes, for there seem to be a many more;
but a recent writer has catalogued them. Perhaps these are only the 10 leading ones from which the smaller errors arise. Let's look over the list and see how many of them are ours:
First, to set up our own standard of right and wrong and judge people accordingly; second, to measure the enjoyment of others by our own; third, to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; fourth, to look for judgment and fortune in youth; fifth, to answer to mold all dispositions; sixth, to look for perfection in our own actions; seventh, to worry ourselves and others with what can not be remedied; eighth, to refuse to yield in immaterial matters; ninth, to refuse to alleviate, so far as it lies in our power, all which needs allevia-tion; tenth, to refuse to make allowance for the weakness of others.

SKIN TROUBLES

A Healing Ointment With a Wide Range of Usefulness

A letter from Mrs. J. E. Cameron, Graduate Nurse, Augusta, Me., says:
"I must write and tell you the good Resinol Ointment has done. I applied it to my ulcerated leg of six months' standing. Almost everything had been tried to heal it. Resinol was applied twice a day for four weeks, and the ulcers are entirely healed. It is now six months since the treatment and no indication of a return of the trouble.
I have used Resinol for eruptions on children's faces, and for everything that seemed to need an ointment, with satisfactory results in every case."

Mrs. F. Cox, Chicago, Ill., says in another letter: "I cannot speak too highly of Resinol Ointment and Soap.
They cured my baby boy of Eczema.
He had a very severe case. Numerous other remedies had been tried and failed to do any good. I would not be without them in the house."

The first application will relieve the itching and irritation in skin diseases, such as the poison of the scabies or eczema.
Chafing, sunburn, Poison Ivy eruptions are often cured by an overnight application.
Resinol Ointment, Resinol Soap and Resinol Medicated Shaving Stick are sold at all Drug Stores.

EPIDEMIC OF ITCH IN WELSH VILLAGE

"In Dowlais, South Wales, about five cent years ago, families were stricken on wholesale by a disease known as the Itch. Believe me, it is the most terrible disease of its kind that I know of, as it itches all through your body and makes your life an inferno.
Sleep is out of the question and you feel as if a million mosquitoes were attacking you at the same time. I knew a dozen families that were so affected."

"The doctors did their best, but their remedies were of no avail whatever. Then the families tried a druggist who was noted for his wide range of his remarkable cures. People came to him from all parts of the country for treatment, but his medicine made matters still worse, as a last resort they were advised by a friend to use the Cuticura Remedies. I am glad to tell you that after a few days' treatment with Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, the effect was wonderful and the result was a perfect cure in all cases."

"I may add that my three brothers, three sisters, myself and all our families have been users of the Cuticura Remedies for fifteen years. Thomas Hugh, 1656 West Huron St., Chicago, Ill., June 23, 1909."

Silenced the Critic.
Charles Sumner, when in London, gave a ready reply. At a dinner given in his honor he spoke of "the ashes" of some dead hero. "Ashes!"
What American English! rudely broke in an Englishman; "dust you mean, Mr. Sumner. We don't burn our dead in this country." "Yet," instantly replied Mr. Sumner, with a courtly smile, "your poet Gray tells us that 'Even in our ashes live their wondered fires.' The American was not criticized again that evening."

Initials.
"What are Mr. Webb's initials?"
"Can't say. He has been talking so many college degrees that nobody can keep track of them."

It's for You.
Being a literary man and having plenty of leisure, both Mr. and Mrs.
Gluppins contributed special articles occasionally to two different newspapers in the town where they resided.
One day Mr. Gluppins picked up a manuscript his wife had just finished, and proceeded to look it over.
"That's very good, Bertha," he said, after completing his inspection, "but I see you use the phrase, 'well-known fact.' I wouldn't do that."
"Well, it's a thing is well-known, why mention it?"
His wife said nothing in rejoinder at the time, but a few days later, while reading one of his articles in print, she found something to criticize.
"Horace," said she, "I am surprised to see you using the phrase, 'self-evident.'"
"What's the matter with that?"
"Why, if a thing is self-evident, what is the use of calling attention to it?"
Horace looked at her sharply over his glasses, but made no verbal response.—Youth's Companion.

Try This, This Summer.
The very next time you're hot and thirsty, step up to a soda fountain and get a glass of Coca-Cola. It will cool you off, relieve your bodily and mental fatigue, and quench your thirst delightfully. At soda fountains or carbonated in bottles—so everywhere.
Delicious, refreshing and wholesome.
Send to the Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta,
Ga., for their free booklet "The Truth
About Coca-Cola." Tells what Coca-
Cola is and why it is so delicious, refreshing and thirst-quenching. And send 3c stamp for the Coca-Cola Baseball Record Book for 1910—contains the famous poem "Casey At The Bat," records, schedules for both leagues
and other valuable baseball information compiled by authorities.

How He Kept the Law.
"I noticed," said the friend who could be trusted, after a trip through the factory where preserves are made,
"that a white powder is first put in the cans, and that the preserves are then put in the white powder."
"Yes," explained the proprietor to the friend who could be trusted, "that white powder is a preservative. You see we are compelled to put the preserves in a preservative because an idiotic requirement of the government makes it unlawful for us to put a preservative in the preserves."

Can You Save?
"Can you save, if there is an incentive. Lots of women in Columbus are using wrappers from Easy Task soap. You know if you send twenty-five of the wrappers and a two cent stamp to the Hewitt Brothers Soap Company, Dayton, Ohio, they will send you a beautiful art reproduction, all ready for framing. Some folks go to a picture store and pay a big fat price for the same pictures. Your grocer keeps Easy Task soap; or he will keep it if you ask for it."

More Serious.
"Mathilde Browne was very rude to an overdressed old woman she met on the street the other day."
"I know the story. The old woman turned out to be Mathilde's very rich aunt, and now she's going to give all her money to a hospital for decrepit dogs."

"Nothing of the sort. In fact, it's worse. The old woman was Mathilde's Brown's new cook—and now they haven't any."

Caught in the Rush.
"My poor man," said the sym-thetic woman, "and how came you to be out of the house?"
"I'll tell you, madam," replied the beggar. "Once I spent my vacation at a summer hotel and I was tramped down trying to get into the dining room after the first bell."

A Knowing Man.
When Young Lord went down to visit an American family, he was told the servants that he was dressing him they should always say "Your Grace." When the young man was asked to go to the dinner table, he said to the lady looking he thought he was her, she demurely replied, "I her hands on her head and into his face with a nervous premonition. "O Lord, for this we are about to receive, we thank thee"—Lippincott's.

This burg was thrown into an excitement about 11 a. m. last Saturday, when it was discovered that the small cottage occupied by Johnnie Sullivan on the place of Nathan Clements, was on fire. The alarm was soon given, and only a few of the residents who were at home responded, but this fire was under such headway, could not be put out, so they proceeded to save the household goods. All in one room was saved and part that were in another. The origin of the fire is a mystery as Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan were not at home at the time. Claud Aramith, who lives with them, cooked his breakfast early that morning and went to the field to work and when he returned at noon he discovered the house on fire. Mr. Sullivan's loss is considerable, as he is also Mr. Clements. The house was covered by $100 insurance in the Boone county company. Mr. Sullivan made his goods and had his father's, where he will remain for a time.

The one that makes the distance in less than a week, was going a lively gallop and $300, the money being put up by two athletic clubs of Astabula. WASH KIDNEY WASH

No chain is stronger than the weakest link. No man is stronger than his kidneys. Overwork, colds, strains, etc., weaken the kidneys and the whole body suffers. Don't ignore the slightest kidney ailment. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills at once.
They are especially good for sick kidneys.

joie, 163 W. Gamble
St., Caro, Mich., says:
"I had lost in flesh until I was a mere shadow of my former self and too weak to stand more than a few minutes at a time.
My feet were broken and my nervous system shattered. Had Doan's Kidney Pills not come to my attention, I fearly believe I would be in my grave.
They cured me after doctors had failed."

SCRATCHED SO SHE COULD NOT SLEEP

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died
I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. It did not take quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvant, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about 18 months old."

"She was taken with the eczema when two years old. She was covered with big sores and her mother had all the best doctors and tried all kinds of salves and medicines without effect until we used Cuticura Remedies. Mr.
H. Kierman, 663 Quincy St., Brooklyn,
N. Y., Sept. 27, 1929."

Merely a Prevaricator.
A doctor relates the following story:
"I had a patient who was very ill and who ought to have gone to a warmer climate, so I resolved to try what hypnotism would do for him. I had a large sun painted on the ceiling of his room and by suggestion induced him to think it was the sun which would cure him. The ruse succeeded and he was getting better rapidly when one day on my arrival I found he was dead."

"Did it fall, after all, then?" asked one of the doctor's hearers.
"No," replied the doctor, "he died of sunstroke."

He Knew The Kind.
Little Edward, aged four, was an only child. He was anxious for a baby sister, and was talking of it one day with his friends of the family. In the friend's family was a baby girl of one year. The lady said: Edward, you may have my baby; she is pretty and sweet."

"Oh," said Edward, "I don't want an aid baby. I want a new one with no

Elbert Hubbard on Suffering.
Elbert Hubbard, editor of the Philadelphia Record, says: "Most of the suffering in this life comes from too much work or too little." He could have left off that "too little," and he would have left it off had he referred to wash-day suffering. There has been too much work on wash day for the women, but now we have Easy Task soap that does the work easily, quickly and healthily and —and does half the work of all by itself. It is the cleanest, purest, white laundry soap made and sold at five cents a cake.

One often wonders why the woman members of a burlesque show require dread-g rooms.

ROUND ABOUT THE STATE

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS GATHERED FROM ALL PARTS OF KENTUCKY

LEXINGTON WINS SUIT.

Demurrer to Plaintiff's Petition Was Sustained by Court.

Lexington, Ky.—In the circuit court Judge Parker handed down his decision in the case of J. T. Blade and others against the city of Lexington and others, better known as the waterworks case. The demurrer to the plaintiff's petition was sustained and the court held that the city might enter into a renewal of its contract with the Lexington Hydraulic and Manufacturing Co., owners of the local reservoirs, for a period of 25 years.

The question on which the decision rests is whether or not the renewal clause of the original contract was binding or whether it was merely a statement of intention to contract.
The clause provided that at the end of 25 years, unless the city purchased the waterworks, the contract should be renewed for a term of 25 years.
The constitution of the state adopted since that time prohibits contracts under such circumstances for a term of more than 20 years.

Judge Parker held that the "shall renew" was a contract, and that the constitution can not impair contracts entered before its adoption.
An exception to the ruling of the court was noted by Samuel M. Wilson, of counsel for the original petitioners,
and an appeal may be taken.

SHERIFF GETS PRISONERS.

Governor's Order to Militia Averts Threatened Clash of Authority.

Paducah, Ky.—Following an order from Gov. Wilson, the prisoners arrested in Lyon county for the murder of Axlom Cooper, a cropper, who was shot at a barbecue at Shinliffe and who died later, were surrendered by Col.
Bassett, in command of the state guard on duty here, to Sheriff L. L.
Cash, who placed them in jail at Eddyville.

The action of the governor probably averted a clash between the troops and civil authorities, who were at swords' points owing to Col. Bassett's refusal to give the sheriff possession of the men under arrest.
As there were several witnesses to the shooting, the real facts are expected to be ferreted out at the examining trial, which has not yet been set, but probably will take place the latter part of the week at Eddyville.

QUARRELED OVER CROP.

Lexington, Ky.—As the result of a quarrel over the condition of a small crop of tobacco, Roger Hanson Pryor, aged 47, game chicken fancier, is dead and Jason W. Bentley, aged 66, farmer and miller, is probably fatally wounded.

The quarrel began when Pryor, in his criticism of his son Frank, and Pryor called the old man a liar. Bentley got a single-barreled shotgun.
Pryor secured a double-barreled shotgun. Stepping about 30 feet from Bentley, Pryor raised his gun and fired. The load of birdshot struck Bentley in the abdomen.
Pryor immediately fired the second barrel and this struck Bentley in the left hip. Simultaneously with Pryor's second shot Bentley fired. The charge went solidly into Pryor's abdomen and he fell forward upon his gun, expiring immediately.

The verdict of Coroner Kiser's jury was that Bentley had killed Pryor in self-defense. Pryor was widely known in the state of American cockfighters.
He was chiefly distinguished for his ability in pitting.

—Mt. Sterling.—Attorneys R. A. Chiles and Robert Winn filed suit in the Montgomery circuit court for William Ledford against former Policeman Warner Hinson, of this city, and the Citizens' Guaranty and Trust Co., of West Virginia, as surety, for $5,000 for malicious assault and battery. Ledford, who is a young farmer, was arrested by Hinson, the officer striking him, it was alleged, with brass knucks.
Since the affair, which caused much comment, Hinson resigned from the force.

Lexington.—It was announced here that Benjamin Hay, of Cincinnati, has decided to sell out his trotters and his Abdallah park training ground at Cynthiana. The park, which contains 74 acres, and the trotters are to be auctioned September 3. There are about 70 head of horses.

Jackson, Ky.—Harry Eversole, son of a slain leader in the French-Ever-sole feud of Perry county, made an unsuccessful attempt on the life of B.
F. French at the Combs hotel here.
There has been bad feeling between the two men for several years on account of the killing of Joe Eversole on Big Creek in Perry county by men whom young Eversole believed were in the employ of French. Friends of both men feared there would be trouble between them as soon as it was learned that French and Eversole were both in town.

Kentucky Intelligence

Jackson.—Ewen Boin, who escaped from the Breathitt county jail, in company with Cal. Miller, charged with murder, was arrested on Buffalo creek, in Owley county.

Paducah.—The main span of the Burlington bridge which will be built at Matopoli, 15 miles below here, will be 100 feet, although the river interests contended for a longer span at the recent meeting in St. Louis.

Paducah.—Louis M. Riecke, chairman of the executive committee of Group 1 of the Kentucky Bankers' association, has announced the program for the meeting to be held here August 17. A large attendance is anticipated.

Louisville.—With his head almost severed from the body, John Beel, 29, a negro, was found at Hancock and Madison streets by two policemen. It is alleged that a negro called Ben Brown did the cutting with a razor and escaped.

Morgantown.—Agents have been in Morgantown in an effort to establish a rival packet line for Green and Bar-ren rivers, between Bowling Green and Evansville.

Lexington.—T. R. Lewis, of Knoxville, and Floyd Evans and R. M. Evans, of Chattanooga, are in jail here charged with robbery. E. O. Sparks, of this city, charged in warrants against the young men that they made him drunk and robbed him of $143.

Augusta.—Charles H. Tooleman, a leading farmer and 56 years old, is dead. He was umpire superintendent and has been on the school board six years; was a Knight of Pythias and prominent Baptist. He leaves a widow and two sons and two daughters.

Mayville.—While taking a traction engine from Foxport to Epworth, several miles east of here, and while crossing a bridge the structure gave way precipitating the engine into the creek, wrecking it and probably fatally injuring Carl Rayburn, who was run over and severely injured, injuring Otha Hayrill and Robert Cash.

Franklin.—Evan Ragland, one of the best job printers in Southern Kentucky, who recently resigned a position on account of ill health, is very ill at the home of his parents in this county. His trouble is tuberculosis of the arm and the probabilities are that the member will shortly be amputated with the hope of saving his life.

Lexington.—Harvey Musselman, 17, who was sent to the Greendale Reform school from Irvington, Breckinridge county, for housebreaking, hanged himself. About a year ago the boy was shot in the right foot and the member was amputated. When he came to the reform school his limb was damaged and he was sent to the hospital of the institution for treatment.

Louisville.—The largest pool of wool ever sold in Kentucky was that disposed of by Boone county growers at Burlington, Ky., when 400,000 pounds was purchased by D. Davis & Son and Isaac Rosenbaum & Sons, of this city.
The price paid for the best grades was 26¢. The wool is said to be the choicest in the state. According to the local purchasers the total price is nearly $90,000.

Frankfort.—After working 17 days and nights on duty at the Frankfort penitentiary as the result of a recent order of the board of prison commissioners that the night matron at the prison should also be on duty in the daytime, Mrs. Addie Martin, for 10 years matron at the prison, has resigned. She is the widow of Jim Martin, one of the well-known politicians of Barren county.

Shelbyville.—Mrs. Sarah Dunn, 83, widow of James H. Dunn, died at her home here of the infirmities of age.
She is survived by four sons and two daughters—James H. Dunn, of Jeffersonville, Ind.; Leslie C. Dunn, of Bowling Green; Victor E. and Lawrence H. Dunn, of Shelbyville; Mrs. Ada Bailor, married to the Jefferson County poorhouse, and Miss Eva Dunn, of Shelbyville.

Eddyville.—Sheriff Bob Gossett delivered Rufus Burroughs to the penitentiary here. In thirty minutes after the verdict Sheriff Gossett left Franklin over the L. & N. via Elizabethtown and Coeella for Eddyville. This circuits route was taken to evade a mob which was believed to be inwaiting to seize the negro murderer who took the life of James Cunningham, a white man, in Logan county.

Lexington.—At a meeting of the board of health it was stated by President J. C. Carrick that there are 15 cases of typhoid fever in the city which are directly traceable to one dairy. The dairymen and his sons are in the hospital and the sale of milk and butter from the plant has been suspended. It was found that the dairymen had been washing his pails, cans and oans with water from a cistern and that this water had been infected with typhoid germs.

Lexington.—The police are hunting George Babin, a farm hand, who recently married in the High Bridge section a daughter of William Buckler, his employer. He is charged with desertion after having obtained over $30 under false pretenses.

Mayville.—Orville L. Politt, aged about 30, residing near Orangeburg, this county, was tried here before Magistrate Pickford for unlawfully delivering the "Nannie Politt" will. He was bound over to the grand jury to the sum of $200, in default of which he was sent to jail.

AN INSURANCE EXCEPTION.

"Now," said the chronic quoter, "a man is known by the company he keeps."
"Say, I'm an insurance policy holder! Please don't class me with the company I keep."

The Good Old Times.
There is a lot of talk about the "good old times." There weren't any "good old times," if you are talking about wash day or house cleaning.
Those tasks meant red hands and headaches and backaches and trouble.
Easy Task laundry soap would have made them "good" old times indeed.
It does half the work in washing and cleaning; it drives the dirt out and not in; it doesn't shrink flannels or streak linens, and it hasn't any rosin in it to rot the fabrics. If your grocer isn't living in the good old times he sells it—lots of it!

There Should.
Fritz the gardener was a stolid German who was rarely moved to extraordinary language. Even the most provocative occasions only caused him to remark mildly on his ill-luck. Not long ago he came back from the city in the late evening after a hard day in the market place. He was sleepy, and the train being crowded, the baggage man gave him a chair in his roomy car.
Finally the train reached Bloomfield. Fritz still slept as it pulled in and his friend had to shake him and tell him where he was.
"Thanks you," said Fritz, as he rose slowly to his feet. The open door of the car was directly in front of him.
He walked straight out of it.
The baggage man sprang to look after him. Fritz slowly picked himself up from the sand by the side of the track, looked up at the door, and said with no wrath in his voice:
"There should here be some steps."

Wife and Country.
Paul D. Cavath, the noted New York lawyer, said at a luncheon at the Lawyers' club: Vacation time is here, and already that dreadful son-about the wife gone to the country is being resurrected. But a variant to the song was furnished by a conversation I overheard the other night.
"Hello, Smith," said one man to another. "I'm glad to see you back at the club again, old fellow. Write off to the country eh?"
"No," growled Smith. "She's got back."

Know How To Keep Cool?

When Summer's sun and daily toil heat the blood to an uncomfortable degree, there is nothing so comforting and cooling as a glass of served with sugar and a little lemon.

Surprising, too, how the food elements relieve fatigue and sustain one.
The flavour is delicious—and Postum is really a food drink.

The Patterson ticket in Tennessee was given a 40,000 majority defeat in the State election last week, and the independent candidates for judges of the supreme court of the State were elected. Patterson's pardoning of Col. Cooper, one of the murderers of ex-United States Senator Carmack, was largely responsible for the overwhelming defeat of the candidates for State officers, whose nomination were forced by the governor. If Patterson is the Democratic candidate for Governor in November the Republicans will elect their candidate by an overwhelming majority. No party can sustain itself with such men as Patterson trying to control it.

Tribute of Respect.
The Boone County Medical Society feel grievously stricken at the death of one of their most valued and loved members, Dr. H. C. Lasing.

We would therefore give this public expression of our exalted esteem for the deceased, and admit the general public to a share in our grief, for his death is a loss, alike, to his profession and the commonwealth.

Deepen our affection and professional esteem we mourn him as a faithful and wise counsellor.

Without malice or envy, ever kind and gentle, he represented the ideal physician.

His was the greatest guardian that men can receive as a reward for their labors, and it is the fact that his name will live as memory shall endure, enthroned in the hearts of those with whom he was associated.

It is not our purpose to extol his virtues nor even to laud his memory, but make public announcement of the sincerity of our grief.

We extend to his bereaved wife, sons and daughters, our deepest sympathy, hoping that this tribute may help in a way to lighten the burden of their sorrow.

It is resolved that these expressions of our sympathy be published in the Boone County Recorder, that an engrossed copy be sent to the bereaved family and spread upon the minutes of the society.

In behalf of the Society—O. E. Senour, B. K. Menefee.

Considerable of the tobacco in this county has been topped while there is considerable that looks as it may never reach a growth that will regulate topping. Tobacco is a crop which very often deceives its early appearance and makes a good crop in a few weeks at the latter part of the season, but if the present crop does anything of that kind it will be little short of a miracle.

FARMERS INSTITUTE

Will Be Held at Hebron Next Tuesday and Wednesday.

In this issue appears the program for the Farmers Institute to be held at Hebron on the 14th and 15th of this month. Those whose names are on the program are urged to prepare themselves, as upon them depends very largely the success of the Institute. No one is assigned a subject with which he is not familiar and capable of presenting in an interesting and instructive manner. Much good will result from this meeting of the farmers. If they will prepare themselves to take part in the Institute, and go after, in earnest, all the Institute will develop during the two days' session. The Farmers Institute held in this county, so far, have not been the successes they should have been, and it is hoped that the coming Institute will prove that the farmers in Boone county appreciate the State's effort to advance their ability to make them attain the highest standard in their pursuit, so do not fail to attend the Institute, and take in the proceedings, seeking and imparting information pertaining to the pursuit of agriculture.

(Warsaw Independent.)

The Farmers' Institute will be held in Warsaw on the 18th and 20th of this month. Gallatin's tobacco crop has shown steady improvement the past week, the dry weather being the thing needed, and this crop this year, noticed in some instances, is its irregularity of size, some patches affording four or five different sizes of tobacco. However, continued good weather will shape the average up about right, and do not be surprised if Gallatin turns up in September with her usual crop, both in pounds and quality.

Dr. Myrax J. Crouch, of Union, Boone County, president of the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton Railway Company, accompanied by some of the promoters of the proposed railroad and the engineer retained by the company, was in Warsaw Wednesday. The party was making the trip in an automobile, and numbered six in all. They stopped here long enough to take on O. A. Bogardus, one of the stockholders in the proposed enterprise, and continued their inspection tour on through to Carrollton, going over the entire route of the proposed railroad.

Warsaw for a "dry" town, had about as fine and as picturesque a collection of "hags" last Saturday as you could find anywhere and when one considers that a man can come to town sober and be drunk in fifteen minutes, admiration and wondering awe stir the breast of the thoughtful as he contemplates an improvement in transportation so great that whisky can be brought here from the nearest wet port, Carrollton--and have it, reciently, all inside of fifteen minutes. Carrollton is nearly twenty miles away, and if the drunks come from there, they are evidently sent by wireless.

Where Will The Tobacco Planter Be.
The men who are opposed to pooling burley tobacco ought to ask themselves where they will be when the hopes of this pool disappear. Every tobacco raiser will be at the mercy of one buyer, and that buyer will be the American Tobacco Company. It must be manifest to tobacco raisers everywhere that their salvation during the past five years has been in these pooling contracts. For the first time they have been able to bring the tobacco trust to terms. It may be, indeed, we think it is true, that this advantage has been purchased somewhat too far--that is, that the price has been advanced to a point where the area of cultivation has been largely extended north of the Ohio and west of the Mississippi river.

Nevertheless, this enlarged area makes it all the more necessary for the burley tobacco growers of Kentucky to stand together in their dealings with the trust and not to be seduced by the fair but false pretenses of the agents of the trust in politics and in business. It used to be the boast of Kentuckians that they had a sense of fair play highly developed; that they paid their own way; that they bore their own burdens; they were able to take care of themselves. They asked favors of no man. This is the basis of the tobacco pool. They are not seeking favors, but justice from the trust. They are exceeding justice. And yet there are scores and hundreds of tobacco growers who are willing to see these farmers in the pool make this fight for them while they contribute nothing in any way to this movement. The time has passed for such cowardly action. Let them get in on the pool raising the weed--Louisville Evening Post.

Tobacco worms in large numbers made their appearance about 10 days ago, and there was a rush on the part of the growers for Paris green with which to stop their destructive work. To make and save a crop of tobacco these latter days does not begin to require the labor that was expended in that direction by the growers half a century ago. Much of the work that was then considered absolutely essential has been dispensed with entirely, while that which has continued has been simplified to such an extent that it is no longer the drudgery through which the old time people had to go.

Numerous fishing parties visited Ounpowder creek last week, but not anything like the amount that they have raised in the past.

Several attorneys were in Bel-levue last Thursday, taking de-posit in the Pick-Rogers law suit.

Judge J. W. Canhamack and wife have the sympathy of all his Boone county acquaintances in their bereavement caused by the death of their little daughter several days since.

The wheat harvest machine threshed last week yielded from fifteen to twenty bushels per acre, a very agreeably surprising the owners. It is not yielding so well in the bottoms.

George Blyth is having a great deal of bad luck with his horse. In the last few weeks one has died, one was badly cut in a wire fence, and one got down in a stall at night and was hurt considerably.

Jaller Sammie Adams was on the jump last week, getting ready for the August term of the Boone circuit court, which convened last Monday. He is one of the busiest men in town this week, but he likes to be on the jump.

A protracted meeting began with the Big Bone Baptist church last Monday night by Pastor McMillan and Rev. O. M. Huey, of Somerset, has already developed considerable interest and bids fair to be a very successful meeting in many ways.

Be sure and take a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with you when starting on your trip this summer. It cannot be obtained on board the trains or steamers. Changes of water and climate often cause sudden attacks of diarrhoea, and it is best to be prepared. Sold by all dealers.

Last Friday Miss Jennie Lee Castleman chaperoned a fishing party of about fifteen little folks who visited Gunpowder creek. No fish were caught, but the day was enjoyed immensely by all the members of the party. At noon an excellent lunch was served, for which the appetites had been sharpened by the various amusements that had been engaged in during the morning. The party arrived home about four o'clock, tired but delighted.

Enough has been learned about the condition of the Richmond Deposit Bank at the date of its failure to know that the loss will amount to about $18,000 and $20,000. The accounts were in a badly demoralized condition, and attorney John L. Vest, of Walton, who audited the books of the defunct institution, has devoted considerable time and much hard labor to the task. He has his report which is a very voluminous affair ready to submit to the parties who are interested.

The Best Hour of Life.

is when you do some great deed or discover some wonderful fact. This home came to the late of Rocky Mt. N. C. when he was suffering intensely, as he says, "from the worst cold I ever had, often proved to my great satisfaction that it was a wonderful cold and Cough Cure Dr. King's New Discovery is. For after taking one bottle I was entirely cured. I can't say anything too kind of a medicine like that." It is a surest and best remedy for diseased lungs, Hemorrhages, La-grippe, Asthma, Hay Fever, Sore Throat or Lung Trouble, 50 cents, $1.00. Trial bottle, free. Guarantee. Send to Dr. J. C. Davis, Br-langer.

A telegram from the Boston wool market states that there have been several sales of fleece wools somewhat out of the ordinary, two or three blocks of 60,000 to 100,000 pounds of unwashed delaines have been sold at prices within a range of 36 to 37. These fleeces were from Ohio grades. Some Ohio half blood sold at 38c. Utah wools from the new clip are beginning to sell, but no open prices have been set. Arizona new wool has sold on a basis of 37c and the new Utah is figured to cost around 38c cleaned. This would indicate that there is a decidedly upper tendency in the prices for wool. The late wool sales in London, which largely govern the prices in this country, have increased, and this has given impetus to prices in this country.—Indiana Farmer.

(Farmers' Home Journal.)

Commissioner Rankin estimates that the tobacco crop of Henry—his home county—will not be over 60 per cent of an average.

At a meeting in Lexington last Saturday of members of the Fayette County Burley Society, the sentiment was almost unanimous in favor of no pot this year unless 75 per cent of the crop was signed.

A press dispatch from Carlisle says that farmers of Nicholas county estimate that the tobacco crop in that county will not be over 40 per cent of an average. Comparatively little of the tobacco in that county has yet been topped.

John Wilkinson, of Barren county, finished cutting his entire tobacco crop August 2nd. He has a very fine crop of Burley.

Samples of the 1909 pool-d Burley will be placed on sale in Lexington August 16.

Secretary James Banks, of the County Union of the Society of Equity, and editor of the Tobacco Tidings, estimate the damage to the growing tobacco crop by recent floods and rains in Henderson, Union, and Webster counties as being $2.5 per cent.

Clothing Price Reductions

Every year clothing stores have their clearance sales and stock-reducing sales at reduced prices. And it is true that concessions are made. But the time has not yet arrived where any of these so-called sales can compete with us. The year round we give you the value and benefit of price. And why? Because:

First. We are manufacturers and buy our cloth by the bolt, not by the suit.

Second. We make every garment we sell at retail.

Third. We sell them to you at $9.95

Or just what the retailer must pay for his $15 and $18 suits.

Fourth. You get the benefit of our great buying power, the benefit of the middleman's profit and the benefit of the difference between the manufacturer and the retailer, because we sell direct to the trade.

Fifth. We guarantee every garment we sell, and keep it pressed and repaired free of charge for one year.

WHAT MORE CAN YOU ASK?

Come and inspect our suits and trousers. You will not obligate yourself to buy by doing so.

The fish fry at H. W. Rouse's over on Gunpowder, last Saturday, was attended by about thirty-five persons. There was an abundance of everything required to make an occasion of that kind a success, and all who attended had a delightful time. About the middle of the afternoon the festivities were concluded and all left for home, declaring their intention to be present at the next one if possible.

Bank examiners for Kentucky, under the Secretary of State, are to be appointed before September 1, but to prevent the committee which is to select the examiners from being swamped with letters of application and recommendation, the names of the committee will not be announced until a few days before the appointments are to be made. The committee which will choose the examiners has been selected and four of the five members have accepted.—Low Times.

It is believed at the big market centers that good beef cattle will soon go much higher. The Drovers Journal a few days ago said:

Good corn-fed cattle are headed toward the 9-cent line. They may not reach their goal this week, but stockyard talent is confident that the prediction will soon be verified as the dropped crop is nearly all in and, therefore, killers must depend on corn-fed bullocks. Grassy and thin cattle, on the other hand, are likely to realize less money, as the summer works along, as the country is full of them, and continued dry weather will be responsible for much imperative liquidation.

Miss Charlotte Hall, who has a position as stenographer in Cincinnati, returned to the city, last Sunday evening after having spent a few days with her mother, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Hall, of Burlington. The rural free delivery does not pay and the Postoffice Department is very seriously considering the abolishment of those routes which pay least. It is said that the grounds upon which many of the routes will be discontinued will be the bad roads. Hereafter no routes will be established unless the route is gone over by the inspector and pronounced good. Inspectors will also be sent out by the government to go over many of the routes now in operation and if the roads are not satisfactory they will be discontinued. This action upon the part of the Postoffice Department should stimulate the movement for good roads, for the farmers have gotten accustomed to getting their mail daily and do not want to do without it.

Once again the Recorder requests that all items and communications for publication be sent to the office not later than Monday night of each week. This week nearly all the neighborhood news came in on Tuesday. Hence it had to be condensed and some of it omitted in order to give all a representation in these columns.

Charles Marman, chairman of the Scott County Board of Control, who was in Lexington Saturday, stated to a Leader representative that he did not believe that the Burley tobacco crop could be made a success this year, as the growers have no enthusiasm and are indifferent about taking hold existing conditions.

The growers of Scott county are not falling over each other to get into the pool this year under the present arrangement. Look at the Burley tobacco crop. At this point it was suggested by the Leader representative that the influence of Congressman Cantrill and his advocacy of a 75 per cent clause in the pool has something to do with the pooling sentiment in Scott county. "Scott county is not the only county in the Burley Belt," replied Mr. Marman, "where the 75 per cent clause is favored. Look at Clark, Montgomery, Bourbon and several other large tobacco producing counties in the Bluegrass. They do not favor the 100 per cent clause. A strong pool would be formed, and this is impossible unless the 75 per cent clause is adopted and made operative." Lexington Leader.

The following excerpts are from a summary of the tobacco crop conditions in the Burley Belt published in the Blue Grass Farmer edition of the Lexington Herald, a few days since: Reports received at headquarters of the Burley Tobacco Society last week give positive form to the estimated damage from season conditions to the growing crop and it is pronounced enormous. A deluge of washing rains and dwarfing dampness gave the first opportunity since planting time for tobacco to show recuperative range. It has been estimated that the conviction of many that the sickness from which a large percent from which the plants suffer is fatal, and a considerable acreage of the crop has been abandoned. In some localities millet is being planted on fields on which tobacco proved a failure.

While continued adverse weather is responsible for the blight of thousands of acres, the manifestation is multifarious. In some localities "strangles," with rust and "black rot," "black rot" and "black rot" in others "frenching" and worm as aids to yellow leaves, and blossoming infant stems. Many hundreds of acres were swept clean by a tornado in one county alone. Has thus visited other districts and caused serious loss. Tobacco in Virginia crop is reported to be near a total loss. If weather prophesies come for anything, the crop has breakers ahead in the multiple counties. A storm moldered by an abnormal spring and summer and the possibility of early frost upon a late crop.

It is total, the damage already done is great, and the price of tobacco may be called to it with profit if the farmer is only brought to a realization of the situation and the tobacco making up the 1901 pool. "True agents and warehousemen should be kept alive, the impression that the crop is large and that ruinous conditions which are confined to his section, and an official of the Burley Society. It is the purpose of the first agent to get as much tobacco under contract as possible, and he urges the grower to be swift in prices that could follow overproduction. The warehousemen devote their efforts to a kind manner; however, many of their tobacco, telling them that it is to their advantage to take advantage of an early market, and sell tobacco over the floor."

Partridges Scarce This Year.

According to those who claim to know, the quail crop in many years will be the smallest in many years, unless the quail perform the unusual feat they did last year, and hatch a second brood, owing to a late cold spring, the quail were something like six weeks later in hatching this year, and when the heavy rains began something over a month ago the young quail were in a critical period. They were not large enough to care for themselves, but the number was so great that the mother could care for only a part of her brood, and as a result thousands were drowned. The first hatch last season perished in a similar manner; however, many remained and hatched a second time. The sportsmen of this section trust they will attempt to double their quail this year. It is also claimed that the quail crop this year will be short under almost precisely the same conditions. The fatality among young quail is the past six years has been something awful. Rabbits are about the only kind of game which can be said to be plentiful here at present—Blue Grass Clipper.

The contract for erecting the new plant in which the hog cholera serum plant will be installed at Lexington, has been let. The building will cost about $1,000 and the entire plant is expected to be ready for business in a short time. The serum for the immunization of hogs against cholera is obtained as follows: Hogs, either naturally or artificially made immune to cholera are given infusions of approximately a quart of blood apiece from hogs sick of virulent cases of cholera. The potency of the blood of the hogs receiving the infusion then rises very high and small quantities of it injected into healthy hogs immunizes them against cholera.

With the addition of two new States to the Union it is thought that it will be a long time before the question of Statehood will again come up. There are other territories, like Alaska and Hawaii not to mention the District of Columbia, and there are other distant possessions such as Porto Rico, Guam and the Philippines, which have provisional governments and where American citizenship is in a state of formation. The Isthmian Zone, however, in breadth but with a "zone of influence" much wider, is a national possession and it is not improbable that owing to the canal influence incident to Canal work, it may at no remote day claim admission to statehood. It is possible that the flag of the Union may in time hold more than forty-eight stars, but that time will certainly be remote.

The promoters of the Dayton, Ohio Industrial Exposition having discovered how easy it is to separate country publishers from space are sending out copy for free puff of their show with the statement that they are "getting ready to consider the proposition of advertising" and add that "the publicity and press committee will be prone to favor papers that have used our stuff when it gets ready to send out the advertising in September." If our brethren would consign such "stuff" to the waste basket and the promoters to the shades of Stygian darkness, we will the sooner come into our own that is fair pay in cash for such publicity.—Lawrenceburg Register.

For years it has been the practice of the Recorder to dump such "stuff" in the waste basket, and only a few weeks since it sent an installment of the Dayton copy over that route.

McCreary A Candidate.

To the Democrats of Kentucky—I have received so many letters requesting me to announce that I am a candidate for Governor, and so many Democrats have in person said to me that if I am nominated I will have the unanimous support of the Democrats of Kentucky, and such a large number of newspapers have published editorials suggesting and endorsing me as the action of the Democratic party.

I believe the party which has honored me so often and to which I have belonged all my life, and whose principles I have ever advocated and upheld, is entitled to my best service whenever needed or demanded.

I have always been in favor of straight, pure Democracy, law and order, honesty and economy in public administration and educational advancement, and my record and my efforts to serve the people faithfully and efficiently, I hope and believe, are well known to the people of Kentucky.

At the proper time I shall be pleased to make speeches in behalf of Democratic principles and Democratic government and Democratic victory in every part of the State and in every county, if desired, and I will be very grateful for the support of my brother Democrats. Richmond, Ky., August 2nd, 1910.

JAMES B. MCCREARY.

The protracted meeting is still in progress at the local Baptist church. Each night has found a large and attentive audience to hear the able sermons delivered by Rev. W. B. Man and Jones. There have been six additional Mrs. R. B. Carver, Mrs. M. M. Hiddell and Misses Jennie Lee Cautleman, Sallie Cautleman, Pauline Kelly and Bessie Hall.

The young men of Hebron neighborhood will give a picnic at Harvest Home Grounds next Saturday afternoon. Dancers will be charged 50 cents. Four pieces of music have been secured for the afternoon.

The dry, hot weather of the past few days has been very hard on the corn and tobacco. Both crops are burning in the field and much of the early will be only good nubbins.

The river is very low. Persons who have been keeping tab on the river all their lives say they never saw it fall as rapidly as it has the past ten days.

STRAYED—About three weeks ago, 300-pound black and white dog named Dan was lost. Information of her whereabouts will be gladly received by C. E. Clure, Hebron.

If it does not rain in the next few days the Erlanger and Florence fairs will have plenty of dust. About ten thousand pounds of the pooled seed was received at W. J. Rice's yesterday.

Mrs. Duffer House has so far improved as to be able to ride out in a buggy. She was at the Burlington and never worse.

John H. Rice with call.

GHOST STORIES

As Told From the Hills of Boone County, Kentucky.

"Ghost. The soul of a deceased person; the soul or spirit separate from the body; an apparition; a phantom."—Webster.

Such is Webster's definition of the word "ghost." Many a person nowadays, though professing to scout the old-time stories of ghosts and other supernatural manifestations, will, in spite of all, feel a little creepy when the mantle of night has fallen and the subject—after the manner of such talk—comes uppermost. And who of these valiant doubters could walk up through a cemetery at night or through some silent, deserted house with "a history" and not represent the quickened pulsation of a heart through which flows the rich, red blood of life or fight down successfully that chill which creeps up the spine?

We have here to deal with manifestations of that nature—in fact, this is a collection of "ghost stories" received at first hand, told from actual experience in the Kentucky county where the scenes are laid.

It was a tobacco growing community and one of the markets was the little town of Burlington. John and John Popham were brothers, had farms not far apart down on the creek by Limburg; both grew tobacco, a pike led to Burlington.

One summer afternoon in the 50's John, Jr., a boy of 18 years, was sent to Burlington with a wagon load—and the evening John Popham walked across the hill to John's to await the return of the boy and learn the market news. Eight o'clock came, but not the boy; 9 o'clock was tolled off by the old clock over the fire place, and yet John did not return. At 10 the lad's uncle decided to wait no longer the coming of the nephew, and started homeward across the hill.

His way lay through the burning ground and he was striding almost through the little plot when suddenly he was startled by the appearance at his right of a figure a few inches above the ground of a phantom coffin which moved, as he did, in the direction of the pike—and Burlington. A chill of horror came over him and he trembled as an aspen. But he recalled a saying that to turn quickly about would rid the victim of such horror, and he wheeled in a flash to retrace his steps. But there again at his right floated the coffin, keeping pace with his now rapid movements.

Once more, Popham faced about, and with his heart chilled by unspeakable dread, ran toward his right and the foot of the hill. The shadow coffin kept with him beyond the confines of the graveyard and down the hill, finally disappearing in the distance.

When John Popham reached his home he said not a thing of what he had seen, but while yet awake in bed, there came a summons to arise and join John Popham's father and other neighbors in a search for the youth. They found him on the Burlington pike, a lone figure, and he had run away and killed him while coming home about the time when John Popham was stalking through the graveyard with his uncanny vision.

Forty years or more previous to the time of this incident when the owners of Kentucky were generally using a low heavy cart in their farm-work carts with a release catch in front so as to easily dump the load—ghostly carts could sometimes be heard laboring in the night at the ford of the little creek where the neighbors of the Pophams—the Cautlemans and the Panners—were in the habit of crossing. The creek bed was full of the small oval stones called "nigger-heads," and those who had heard the cart would rattle slowly to the bank of the creek, there would be a pause, then with a clatter a load of stone, usually, would go splashing into the creek. This would be repeated time and again, but no one ever got a glimpse of the phantom at his endless labor.

Two score years had passed; the ghost at the creek had been that time silent and forgotten, and the tale had not become known to the younger folk of the community. One night, returning from a visit across the creek, a boy—he is now a prominent member of the Missouri bar—was coming through the woods above the ford. The night was intensely dark in the timber, was as black as Egypt and the lad was carefully treading his way along through the trees. As he approached the fence through which he must crawl to descend the hill he heard the rattle of a cart, as if some one were using the ancient one for road work. With his head behind the barn at home, straining his eyes as he heard the straining of the cart, he was hoping to distinguish who could be so late at such an hour, he could scarce see his hand before him. Then the cart paused apparently directly ahead, and there came a clatter and the sound of a load of rock splashing into the creek. The boy hurried on to the ford, but all was quiet and deserted.

Several days later the young fellow mentioned the matter to one of the elders of many years residence in the neighborhood, and he was started by the reply "My God, boy, you are the first person who has heard that noise in forty years."

The old brick house on the top of the hill a quarter of a mile or so back from the Limburg pike

Hebron road, was once the home of a family which came into Boone from Bourbon county, Kentucky. Commonly reputed to be haunted, this staunch-hearted family took the place nevertheless, and but for the unexplained occasions when the mother, hearing a noise in the attic as though some one had fallen, ran up, in fear, only to find it quite deserted, there had been no unusual manifestation.

Lucy Norman, a sister, however, finally became ill and it was soon apparent that death had set its seal upon her brow. As the days lengthened into weeks the ticking of the clock—one of the old fashioned, eight-day—was heard, and it was thereupon stopped.

Nearly a year had dragged its weary length away before the final summons came to Lucy Norman, and in all that time the old clock had not been touched. High on its pedestal it stood, covered with dust, unobserved, unheeded.

But in the silent reaches of the brooding, sorrowful night, when the last faint flicker of the life light in the pain-racked body of Lucy Norman wavered, went low, flared up again and then went out, the old clock in the hall—out there in the dark with not a soul about it—began striking!

One! Two! Three! Four! Five! Six! Seven! Eight! Nine! Ten! Eleven! Twelve!

With the final stroke all was still again save for the sobbing of the loved ones of the dead. On the old clock the accumulated dust of nearly a year was undisturbed and the key hung on its accustomed nail beneath where it had remained untouched for many months—Roy T. Cloud in Pleasant Hill, (Mo.) Times.

The dairy cow, it is able to express herself in a way which the human family would comprehend, might well lay claim to being the best friend. She might establish such a claim by calling attention to the fact that from her product and from her carcass man manufactures more of the necessities of life than from any other similar source. She furnishes these necessities to him from infancy until such a time as temporal things are no longer associated with his existence, and she does it ungrudgingly and constantly.

In addition to contributing to man's necessity and his pleasure the prosperity of an agricultural community is more closely identified with her than with any other of the domestic animals. The horse is a great asset in tilling the soil, but where necessity requires it the sturdy son of a cow can take his place, as he is able to convert agricultural section on earth. The horse can only furnish labor and can only return a profit to his owner when conditions are right for returning satisfactory grain crops. It is a well known fact that the dairy cow is the salvation of the farmer in time of poor crops, as he is able to convert the rough crops which are never a total failure, into dairy products which always have a cash value.

In addition to this she furnishes milk and butter milk for the calves, pigs and poultry and fertility for the soil, without which a farm becomes less valuable. A cow is a great asset to the whole country life proper.

The elimination of the dairy cow would necessitate an almost revolutionary readjustment of man's tastes and requirements. It would mean untold suffering and hardship. Of course she will not be dispensed with but her value can perhaps best be appreciated by contemplating such a loss.

She will continue to be man's best friend as long as the human family exists and will keep on supplying him with his greatest need just as she has done thru all the ages.

When To Cut The Corn.

Long experience has shown that the time to cut corn for silage is when the grain begins to glaze and harden. It is at that time mature and in the highest condition of nutrition, and when put into the silo will not sour as when immature. Years ago the mistake was made of cutting the corn for the silo before it came to a mature condition, and then it soured, and many denounced silage on account of their own mistake in cutting too early. Cutting for fodder, as stated by one of the experiment stations, is as follows: When in silk it has twice as much dry matter as when in tassel, when in milk three times, when glazed four times, and when ripe five times as much as when in tassel. The digestible matter also increases as the corn matures, so that the increase in dry matter is even less than the increase in digestible matter per acre. With these facts in mind one cannot be left in doubt as to the importance of allowing corn to come as near ripe as possible before it is cut for fodder. It should not be left, however, after it is ripe for the leaves to be broken off by the wind and the digestible matter bleached out by rain and dew. The common mistake, however, is for the grower to cut it too early.

The amount of dry matter in a corn field increases at almost a regular rate from the time of tasseling until fully ripe. In round numbers it is as follows: When in silk it has twice as much dry matter as when in tassel, when in milk three times, when glazed four times, and when ripe five times as much as when in tassel. The digestible matter also increases as the corn matures, so that the increase in dry matter is even less than the increase in digestible matter per acre. With these facts in mind one cannot be left in doubt as to the importance of allowing corn to come as near ripe as possible before it is cut for fodder. It should not be left, however, after it is ripe for the leaves to be broken off by the wind and the digestible matter bleached out by rain and dew. The common mistake, however, is for the grower to cut it too early.

The Desire For Land.

There never has been such a desire as now exists on the part of thousands of landless people to obtain land.

Two chief things impel to this desire, and these are the desire for an investment of savings for a rainy day, and the fact that all perceive now that good land must go on advancing rapidly. The products of an acre now in almost anything has been more than doubled in the last ten years, perhaps wheat should be excepted, but we have gone on from 60 cents to more than $1.00 per bushel for wheat in the last fifteen years, and so it is of every other product of the soil.

People perceive now that the complex conditions of life and the advancement to higher things in every industry that prices will advance rather than recede in the next ten or twenty years, and so hundreds of people seem to have instinctively turned to the soil for provision against the future.

These things are the chief motives for the wonderful desire now to obtain land. This has been accelerated by the return of some thousands of people to this country from Canada, who have turned their eyes to the southwest for a warmer climate.

Louis, the noted roadster of H. O. Blanton, of Erlanger, dropped dead in a race at the Newport fair last Wednesday. He had trotted two heats, and Mr. Blanton, who was driving him, thought from the way he handled, he was in excellent condition, but just as he entered the home stretch in the third heat he swerved, fell and it was all over with him.

Life On Panama Canal.

Has had one frightful drawback—malaria trouble that has brought suffering and death to thousands. The germs cause chills, fever and ague, biliousness, jaundice, lassitude, weakness and general debility. But electric Bitters never fail to destroy them and cure malaria troubles. "Three bottles completely cured me of a very severe attack of malaria," writes Wm. A. Fretwell, of Lucama, N. C. "and I've had good health ever since." Cure Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles, and prevent Typhoid. Sec. Guaranteed by Bentley's Drug Store, Erlanger.

The following item comes from Frankfort, Clinton county, this State:

What is thought to be the Indiana record and perhaps the high mark for the world on the yield of oats per acre was made in this county. A nine-acre field on the Nellie Dill farm, four miles east of Frankfort, produced 981 bushels of No. 1 grain, an average of eighty-nine bushels to the acre, about two and a fourth times the average yield for oats in this county. Can any other state show as good a yield?—Indiana Farmer.

The farmer who owns a farm is the particular person who is fixed. Banks may fail and factories close, workmen strike and mines suspend, merchants fail and town burn, times may be panic and even crops may be short—but the farmer who owns his acres will get along. He will live in comfort and quiet with plenty to eat, drink and wear. He is the most independent man on earth. Yet there are lots of them who do not appreciate their situation.

Circuit Court.

The resignation of S. L. Webb, cashier of Erlanger Deposit Bank, to take effect October 1st, will make vacant a good position for some one, and there are about twenty applicants for the place and the return is not all in. Mr. Webb is a most excellent gentleman, a good business man and one of the most efficient bank officials in Northern Kentucky. He has been with the Erlanger Deposit Bank ever since it opened its doors for business, and the bank will be exceedingly fortunate if it succeeds in securing the services of another person who can fill the position in the very satisfactory manner that Mr. Webb has. His departure from Erlanger will be a loss to the town in every station where the services of an excellent citizen is required.

Several of the indictments returned by the grand jury are against parties for selling pooled tobacco.

J. C. Byland and Raymond Byland, cashier and assistant cashier, respectively, of the Richwood Deposit Bank, were indicted for embezzlement, while the former was also indicted for forgery.

Robert Moore and Lela Prasse, her dogs, and mangled a number of sheep belonging to H. O. Adams, who sued them for $250 damages. The case was tried before a jury which gave Adams a verdict for $10.

In the action of Mrs. Nannie A. Hind against the Walton and Verona Turpin Co., and Thos. Johnson, constable, upon the plaintiff's testimony all being heard the court instructed the jury to find for the defendant. This suit was for damages claimed by reason of an attachment being levied on car load of property belonging to her instead of to her husband, Jas. G. Hind.

The petit jurors for the term cost the State $17.75, while the grand jurors $150 for their five days services.

The fine reported by the trustees of the jury fund as collected since the last April term of the court amounted to $97. All the suits brought by the Burley Tobacco Society against the parties who had sold their pooled tobacco were compromised, the defendants paying ten per cent damages and the costs of the action.

The indictments against persons for selling pooled tobacco were continued until the December term of the court.

The grand and petit jurors were finally discharged at a verdict of noon, and were paid for their services.

To Hon. J. W. Cammack, Judge Boone Circuit Court: "We, the grand jury at and for the August term, 1910, of the Boone court would respectfully report that we have been in session five days and have examined 46 witnesses upon whose testimony we have returned 16 indictments, four for felony and 12 for misdemeanors."

"We have examined into the condition of the county infirmary and find that same is leaking badly, and recommend that the same be repaired."

The county jail we find in good condition."

The grand jury returned the names of several witnesses who failed to obey the subpoenas served on them and recommended subpoenas be issued for them."

In the case of D. E. Castlemann against C. E. Lipcomb the plaintiff received a verdict and judgment for $450 the amount of the note sued on, subject to a credit of $200. This note was executed to the plaintiff when employed by the defendant as his attorney in action involving some land, but afterwards secured associate counsel, and then refused to pay Castlemann on the grounds that he did not own the land, and the defendant was given to the third day of the next court to file his bill of evidence and exceptions for the purpose of an appeal to the court of appeals. Judge Cammack signed the orders of the last day about 3:30 Friday afternoon and took his departure for home.

The lawyers all agree that a large volume of business was disposed of during the five days' session of the court.

Friday was a busy day with the leading tobacco men of the county, watching the interest of the Burley Tobacco Society.

Several big suits were continued until the December term of the court.

Hon. W. F. Dickerson, of Cincinnati, and Hon. J. G. Tomlin and John L. Vest, of Walton, were the only non-resident attorneys present at the final adjournment of the court.

Both hands did a good business during court.

First. Thou shalt wait for something to turn up, but thou shalt pull off thy coat and go to work that thou mayst prosper in thy affairs and make the word "Failure" spell success. Thou shalt govern thy living so thy health will be preserved.

Second. Thou shalt not lack inclination or be content to go about thy business looking like a bum for thou shouldst know that thy personal appearance is better than a letter of recommendation.

Third. Thou shalt be open minded and not try to make excuses, nor shalt thou say to those who chide you, "I don't think."

Fourth. Thou shalt not wait to be told what thou shalt do, nor in what manner thou shalt do it, but take the initiative, for thou mayst then days be long in the job which fortune hath given thee.

Fifth. Thou shalt not fail to maintain thine own integrity, be honest with thyself as well as with thy fellow beings nor shalt thou be guilty of anything that will lessen thy respect for thyself.

Sixth. Thou shalt not covet the other fellow's job, nor his salary, nor the position he holds, but be satisfied by his own hard labor and industry.

Seventh. Thou shalt be tactful and fall not to let within thy income, nor shalt thou contract any debts which thou canst not see any way clear to pay them.

Eighth. Thou shalt have full knowledge of thy business and be not afraid to blow thine own horn for he who falleth to blow his own horn at the proper occasion findeth nobody standing ready to blow it for him.

Ninth. Thou shalt invest thyself with enthusiasm and fall not to say "no" when thou meanest "no," nor shalt thou fail to remember that there are times when it is unwise to bind thyself with a hasty judgment.

Tenth. Thou shalt be sincere and give every man a square deal. This is the last grand commandment, and there is no other like unto it. Upon this commandment hangs all of the law and profits of the business world.—Ex.

Saintliness and sanity are both a happy balance between self and society.

Too many are praying for a harvest of love who have planted no seeds of kindness.

The greatest difficulty in winning the esteem of others lies in our foolish estimate of ourselves.

The Best Hour of Life.

is when you do some great deed or discover some wonderful fact. This hour came to J. R. Pitt, of Rocky Mt., N. C., when he was suffering intensely, as he says, "from the worst cold I ever had, then proved to my great satisfaction what a wonderful cold and Cough Cure Dr. King's New Discovery is. For after taking one bottle I was entirely cured. I can't say anything too good of a medicine like that. It is the surest and best remedy for diseased lungs, Hemorrhages, La Grippe, Asthma, Hay Fever, any Throat or Lung Trouble, Croup, Whooping Cough, etc., etc. Guaranteed by Bentler's Drug Store, Erlanger.

To Stop "Wild Cat Banking."

Applications for charters for several new banks have been filed with the Secretary of State, but have not been granted, as Dr. Bruner wants to investigate the towns in which the banks are to be located and the men who are organizing the banks. If he finds that the towns are able to support a bank and that the people have shown an interest in its success and the backers are out to establish a permanent bank the charter will be issued. Dr. Bruner wants it understood, however, that no new bank will be allowed to get a charter unless he is convinced that the bank will be a success. He says he is going to stop professional bank founders and wild-catting, and that the bank must be solid or it cannot do business in this State.

Struck A Rich Mine.

S. W. Bendap of Coal City, Ala., says he struck a perfect mine of health in Dr. King's New Discovery. He cured him of Liver and Kidney Trouble after 12 years of suffering. They are the best pills on earth for Catarrh, Malaria, Headache, Dropsy, Debility, etc. at Bentler's Drug Store, Erlanger.

Clothing Price Reductions

Every year clothing stores have their clearance sales and stock-reducing sales at reduced prices. And it is true that concessions are made. But the time has not yet arrived where any of these so-called sales can compete with us. The year round we give you the value and benefit of price. And why? Because:

First. We are manufacturers and buy our cloth by the bolt, not by the suit.

Second. We make every garment we sell at retail.

Third. We sell them to you at $9.95

Or just what the retailer must pay for his $15 and $18 suits.

Fourth. You get the benefit of our great buying power, the benefit of the middleman's profit and the benefit of the difference between the manufacturer and the retailer, because we sell direct to the trade.

Fifth. We guarantee every garment we sell, and keep it pressed and repaired free of charge for one year.

WHAT MORE CAN YOU ASK?

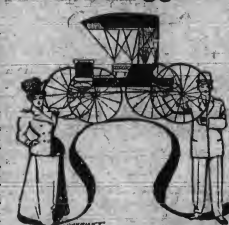

Come and inspect our suits and trousers. You will not obligate yourself to buy by doing so.

It is now announced from Washington that the trustees who have in hand the carrying into effect of the law creating postal savings banks are getting busy under the impulse of scores of applications from all parts of the country. It is now announced that the trustees are working out the details for the operation of these savings banks at the post offices of the country, and they will probably be ready early in October to publish and send out rules for their organization, and it is now believed that many of such savings institutions will be ready to receive deposits by November.

No. 1 Pike St., Cor. Madison Ave., COVINGTON, KY.

Democratic papers are so hard to bring about a break between President Taft and Mr. Roosevelt, while the political papers are doing all they can to prevent the break.

Cities that are disappointed because of the census returns should reflect that Uncle Sam is as much interested in making a good showing as any particular community possibly can be.

Texas is having a hard struggle with the temperance question. The third called session of the General Assembly adjourned last week, and of the temperance prohibition bills introduced only three succeeded in getting by.

The Democratic party seems to have a pretty good chance to capture the next National House of Representatives, but the Democratic party is very much like the Cincinnati Reds, never wins when its chances appear good.

Secretary of State Bruner will try to have the State banks in Kentucky put on a perfectly safe basis, and require them to observe banking principles, and with that in view a bank examiner is being called on a State bank at any time now.

Mercilessly and relentlessly the forest fires in western Montana and Idaho are sweeping over vast areas, driving hundreds of fugitives before them, destroying small settlements and wiping out of existence millions of dollars worth of property.

When the airship passenger routes are in full operation it should be unnecessary to post signs warning passengers not to get off while the machine is in motion. But the acquaintance with the traveling public may result in keeping the sign up.

Despite the injurious effects to growing crops, the Department of Agriculture predicts that there will be $9 million more bushels of corn raised this year than last and it says the wheat crop will also be much larger notwithstanding the severe drought in the Northwest.

The Tarrytown, N. Y., Assessors have again raised their estimates of the value of John D. Rockefeller's home at Pocantico Hills. This year it goes on the roll at $300,000 instead of $250,000. Mr. Rockefeller sent word that he was perfectly satisfied with the additional assessment.

Official census figures give Cincinnati a population of 344,463. It will be observed that the figures read the same way backward as forward. Possibly those superstitiously inclined have also noticed that either half foot up 13, and of course the total of the entire number makes two times 13.

Judges W. A. Berry, of Paducah, and J. A. Donaldson, of Carrollton, in an opinion sent to Henry R. Hewitt, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, state that the election of a successor to Prof. Crabbe, who resigned as Superintendent of Public Instruction can be held this fall under their interpretation of the State Constitution.

Under a verdict rendered by a Cleveland jury the free-lunch brigade of Ohio may still get food in barrooms for next to nothing. The jury held that by giving ten cents for a penny the act making it unlawful to give away food in barrooms was satisfied. That decision is clearly a case of whipping the devil around the bush.

It now begins to look like there will be very little trouble in pooling the 1910 crop of tobacco. There has certainly been a great change among the farmers in their attitude towards the pool, and in localities where it was thought it would be impossible to pool much of the tobacco the collectors are having very little trouble to get the growers to sign up.

Chicago Base Ball Club Can Not Take Ed Sandford On at Present

Edward Sandford, the herculean pitcher of Rising Sun, Ind., loses a big league chance this week, all because of the injuries to Harry Steinfield and Art Hotman. Having heard good reports of the powerful semi-pro, wanted to try him out this week, and had even slated him for a chance in one of the Brooklyn games. The injuries to Hofman, Steinfield and Pfister and the jumping of Kroh, as luck would have it, put the damper on the youngster. With the 35 limit rule enforced, the Cubs are now so handicapped that they must keep every man on the present payroll ready for emergency calls, and no new stars can be taken on until the air clears up and two or three of the extra performers can be safely permitted to go. Sandford, a corking pitcher and strong hitter, looks more than good to the Cubs and will get his chance at the earliest opportunity. That is, he'll get the chance if some other team doesn't grab him. The boy looks to be the goods of which the future greats are made, and is well worth the trial.—Times Star, Aug. 18th.

Ed Sandford is very popular with all the local fans and they are unanimous in the wish that he will get an early try-out and that he will become a Cub for keeps.

BASE BALL.

With a patched line-up the Burlington ball team defeated the Grange Hall team on the local grounds last Saturday afternoon 12 to 9. Fred West, of Bellevue, was in the box for Burlington and threw a good game and was given fairly good support. The visitors used Utz and Taylor on the mound, and they were hit hard and often, Conner and Slayback each making a home run. Jack Sandford officiated at first for Burlington and came back in a manner that was a revelation to all who witnessed his performance. He put up a sensational game.

East Bend defeated Big one last Saturday, 10 to 4. Cecil Williamson held Big one to four hits. On the 21st East Bend beat Petersburg 17 to 3, Williamson allowing only 5 hits, striking out 17 to Shinkles 7. The same day East Bend defeated Bellevue, 15 to 3, Berkshire allowing 4 hits, striking out 15 men, while Conner and Shinkles allowed 15 hits and struck out 6.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Pleasant church will have charge of the dining halls at the Erlanger and Florence fairs, Oct. 15, 16 and 17. Their patronage is solicited.

E. H. Norman, of Walton, writes to have his Recorder changed to 27 East Pratt, Indianapolis, Ind.

Jack Sandford and R. B. Carver were in a pretty nice drove of cattle yesterday.

For Sale—Eight or nine shots, different sizes. Apply to J. M. Eddins, Burlington.

Stephen Robbins, one of the Recorder's loyal supporters, called on it yesterday.

The race track at Erlanger is fair grounds is said to be in fine condition.

The fair the last month has been one of the best of the season.

Where is Your Hair?

In your comb? Why so? Is not the head a much better place for it? Better keep what is left where it belongs! Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, quickly stops falling hair. There is not a particle of doubt about it. We speak very positively about this, for we know.

Does not change the color of the hair.

Formula with each bottle show it to your doctor. Ask him about it, then do as he says.

Ayer's

Indeed, the one great leading feature of our new Hair Vigor may well be said to be this—it stops falling hair. Then it goes one step further—it aids nature in restoring the hair and scalp to a healthy condition. Ask for "the new kind."

Several horses and considerable show paraphernalia have passed through Burlington this week bound for the fair at Erlanger.

The low water has caused Capt. Kotmyer to provide a float for the accommodation of his patrons, the water on the Ohio side being so shallow that his boat cannot reach the shore.

Florence people are prepared to entertain a very large number of strangers next week. In fact, this week is a prosperous period for Florence people, but they earn all the money they take in.

Each of the Lawrenceburg papers pronounce the fair held there this month the best in the history of the town. The weather, attendance and exhibition were good all four days.

Generally by this time of the year considerable coal has been put in the local bins, but the Burlington teamsters have been too busy for several months to give that branch of work any attention.

Albert Cossner brought a sample of very fine tobacco to this office, last Saturday. He said it represented the best that he had received and was a top-notch grade. He thinks there is none better in the county.

Edgar Berkshire and Everett Walton had some of the finest sport ever down on Woolper, on day last week, when they caught fourteen pounds of nice bass. They say they never expect to have another day's sport equal to it.

The low water and almost nightly fogs have demoralized navigation in the Ohio river—the "meet-the-boat" trips have been abandoned—and the going and coming of steamboats has been uncertain.—Rising Sun Recorder.

In buying a cough medicine, don't be afraid to get Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is no danger from it, and relief is sure to follow. Especially recommended for coughs, colds and whooping cough. Sold by all dealers.

It looks very much like providence is taking a hand against the American Tobacco Company in the effort to make it pay the growers a fair price for their tobacco in comparison with the profit that company realizes in handling the weed.

When you read of Berkshire and Walton's luck fishing down on Woolper don't get excited and hasten to the creek expecting to have a like success. Such another catch of bass will not be made in Woolper creek again this side of the half century mark.

The convention of the Christian churches of Boone county with the church at Bellevue on the 18th inst. was attended by a very large number of people. They were present from every neighborhood in the county. Bellevue people entertained in a lavish manner.

If it does not rain this week it will require a very large quantity of beer to keep the dust cut out of the throats of those who attend the Erlanger fair, and unless it rains a like quantity will be required in Florence next week to stave off the thirst of those who attend the fair at that place.

There are between 50,000 and 75,000 pounds of pooled tobacco ready to be baled at the Burlington warehouse so soon as room can be made for it which will be at an early date, as Mr. Conner, with the assistance of two hands, is pricing tobacco at the rate of two 1,200 pound hogheads per day.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by all dealers.

At one trip Saturday morning the ferryboat and barge and launch used in connection with it brought over 143 passengers from Boone county. The number of Kentuckians who attended the fair that day is said to have been the largest in twenty years. That the people of Boone county appreciate the improved ferry service at this point was abundantly demonstrated last week.—Fair notes in Lawrenceburg Press.

The attendance at the Farmers' Institute held at Hebron, last week, was not as large, by any means, as it should have been, nevertheless, it was quite interesting, and those who attended were well paid for the time they devoted to it. The speeches were all interesting and abounded with information along farming lines. It was about the best institute ever held in the county.

Called to BE WITNESS
His word, "witness" is one
of the great words of the Bible. It is found at least a hundred times in the Old and New Testaments with reference to testimony to God; and the thought that lies beneath the word is simply "telling out what we know," for which any child is competent, and for which even the greatest man is no more, than his competent. To know something about God and tell what we know—that is witness in the true Biblical sense.

A New Version.
Lawyers have a peculiar system of abbreviation, such words as trustees, creditors being cut down to trees, cres, and cress. This practice led to an amusing slip on the part of a soldier, who, somewhat late in life, abandoned his profession and entered the church. A few Sundays after his ordination he startled his congregation while reading the lesson by delivering one of the passages as follows:
"I see men as trustees walking."

A Five-Cent Washwoman.
In Evanston, Illinois, washwomen get from $2 to $2.50 per day, and carfare to and from work. Five years ago they got $1.50 a day. Naturally wash day is an expensive day there.
But now women everywhere are learning of a wash-day worker that only costs a nickel. Easy Task laundry does half the work all by itself, saves money, saves time, saves fuel,
saves health and saves clothing.
Many women say it solves the servant problem.

SOMETIMES.
Henderson—When a man marries he keeps his wife in dresses, hats, shoes—in fact, everything she needs.
What does a wife keep her husband in?

Penstock (absent)—Hot water.
Less Lavish.
"I saw Uncle Tom's Cabin played recently."
"So?"
"I think I'll read the book."

Opinions Aired.
"Were the commencement exercises interesting?"
"Very. The time was divided between advice from public men on the selection of a career and suggestions from graduates on how to run the government."

Game.
The Creditor—Will you pay this bill

Called to BE WITNESS
His word, "witness" is one
of the great words of the Bible. It is found at least a hundred times in the Old and New Testaments with reference to testimony to God; and the thought that lies
beneath the word is simply "telling out
what we know," for which any child
is competent, and for which even the greatest man is no more, than his competent. To know something about God
and tell what we know—that is witness in the true Biblical sense.

Had Lost Faith in Doctors and Medicines
"I wish to thank you for the sample of Resinol Soap sent me several weeks ago," writes Mrs. M. F. Clemmer, Sunbury, Pa. "At that time my baby's face was like a raw and bleeding piece of meat. Medicine from three different physicians, besides various salves recommended by friends, all seemed to make the Ecema worse.
Then another mother recommended Resinol Ointment which I procured at once, although I had no more faith in it than in the rest I had tried; but never did I spend fifty cents to better advantage. The first and second days I noticed a remarkable change, and now at the end of the third week, my precious blue-eyed, rosy-cheeked baby is perfectly well again. I think the cure was surely something remarkable.
Resinol Ointment and Soap did in three weeks what everything else failed to do in four months. My baby had been positively disfigured, now his complexion is all right again."

Dying Thief's Great Witness.
The greatest witness in the world of God, next to the Lord Jesus Christ, is not Paul the apostle, but the dying thief. We have heard depreciated the penitent thief. There was the stark ness over all the earth, there was the dying Christ, and even the disciples themselves had given up their hopes that Christ was "who should have redeemed Israel." Perhaps that penitent thief had never seen Christ before, or, at best, only in the course of the trial, when the Christ said: "I am a king; my kingdom is not of this world." He had no opportunity, for night we know, of any acquaintance with the Lord Jesus Christ or with his teaching. And yet, while the other malefactor railed on the judge, he gave his witness, even before he had the Lord's assurance and blessing. He said:
"Doth not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?" And we indeed justly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man had done nothing amiss. What a melting testimony! A thief dying on a cross and Jesus Christ dying beside him, he not knowing the person of Christ, or his character, never having even set under his teaching; and yet that poor penitent thief saw a king in the dying Jesus, and that death and burial were the ushering of the king into his kingdom. He says: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." There is hardly anything more pathetic and melting and marvelous in the whole of the New Testament than that penitent thief's testimony and prayer.

Doll House Library.
A search for a child's short story,
"The Griffin and the Minor Canon," in a volume all by itself revealed to a persistent city shopper the thought and money that are expended on the furnishing of doll's houses. Book stores had not the story in a single volume, but in a department store one young woman interviewed had recently been transferred from the toy department and was able to contribute a helpful hint.

LEG A MASS OF HUMOR
"About seven years ago a small abrasion appeared on my right leg just above my ankle. It irritated me so that I began to scratch it, and it began to spread until my leg from my ankle to the knee was one solid scale like a scab. The irritation was always worse at night and would not allow me to sleep, or my wife either, and it was completely undermining our health. I lost fifty pounds in weight and was almost out of my mind with pain and chagrin as no matter where the irritation came, at work, on the street or in the presence of company,
I would have to scratch it until I had the blood running down into my shoe.
I simply cannot describe my suffering during those seven years. The pain, mortification, loss of sleep, both to myself and wife is simply indescribable on paper and one has to experience it to know what it is."

Leg a Mass of Humor
"I tried all kinds of doctors and remedies but I might as well have thrown my money down a sewer. They would dry up for a little while and all me with hope only to break out again just as bad if not worse. I had given up hope of ever being cured when I was induced by my wife to give the Out-cure Remedies a trial. After taking the Outcure Remedies for a little while I began to see a change, and after taking a dozen bottles of Out-cure Resolvent in conjunction with the Outcure Soap and Outcure Ointment, the trouble had entirely disappeared and my leg was as fine as the day I was born. Now after a lapse of six months with no signs of a recurrence I feel perfectly safe in extending to you my heartfelt thanks for the good the Outcure Remedies have done for me. I shall always recommend them to my friends. W. E. White, 111 E. Cabot St., Philadelphia, Pa., Feb.
4 and 13, 1920."

SIMPLE STATEMENT OF FACT
Mr. Johnson Unable to See Where in Any Way He Had "Put His Foot in It."

It is common to deplore the lack of humor in a person. Yet the very want of it may save a certain amount of embarrassment, as was the case on a certain occasion with President Johnson. "He was one day," says a writer in Harper's Magazine, "visiting my mother, and a friend, Mrs.
Knox, a widow, came in. She had known Mr. Johnson some years before, when he was a member of the legislature but they had not met since then.

After mutual recognition, Mr.
Johnson said: "How is Mr. Knox? I have not seen him lately."
"He has been dead six years," said Mrs. Knox.
"I thought I hadn't seen him on the street," said Mr. Johnson.
"When Mrs. Knox left, my mother said, laughing: 'That was a funny mistake of yours about Mr. Knox.'"
"What mistake did I make?" said Johnson. "I said I hadn't seen him on the street, and I hadn't."

Try This, This Summer.
The very next time you're hot, tired or thirsty, step up to a soda fountain and get a glass of Coca-Cola. It will cool you off, relieve your body and mental fatigue and quench your thirst delightfully. At soda fountains or carbonated in bottles—Coca-Cola is delicious, refreshing and wholesome.
Send to the Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta,
Ga., for their free booklet "The Truth
About Coca-Cola." Tells what Coca-
Cola is and why it is so delicious, refreshing and thirst-quenching. Also send 26 stamps for the Coca-Cola Baseball Record Book for 1910—contains
the famous poem "Casey at the Bat,"
records, schedules for both leagues
and other valuable baseball information compiled by authorities.

A Bernhard Trick.
Mrs. Sarah Bernhard, who is supposed to be something of an artist as well as an actress, was recently called upon to model a certain bust in view of the audience. This fairly electrified the critics, but when going into rap-sodies over the technical skill in handling the clay which Mrs. Bernhard exhibited they showed that they knew little of the "tricks of actors and actresses," as a matter of fact, she was doing nothing of the kind. The bust is modeled and baked, and over it is placed damp clay of the same color.
This the talented actress merely pulled off, exposing the beautifully modeled head underneath.

Making Tasks Easy.
There are lots of magazines printed for the purpose of telling women how to make their work lighter. But you can't reduce labor by reading about it.
All the philosophy and theory in the world won't help you out on wash day unless you use Easy Task Soap, which lives up to its name and makes washing an easy task by doing half the work. Get it at your grocer's.

And They Wondered!
Judge Nicholas Longworth, who used to sit on Ohio's supreme bench, looked unusually grave, and a neighbor, in recognition of his facial depression, named a pet owl "Judge Longworth."
It was the very next day that an accused maid broke up his wife's garden party. "Oh, madam," said she, "Madam! Judge Longworth has laid an egg!"

Nipped in the Bud.

Quaint Table Manners.
Jerome S. McWade, the Duluth millinaire, talked at a dinner about the delights of a backwoods vacation.
"I go to a quaint backwoods village every summer," he said, "and numbers are the quaint people I meet there."

"Old Boucher, for instance, the fan-tor of the village church, is most amusing with his quaint ways. I had old Boucher to lunch one day, and the cold lobster was served with a mayonnaise sauce. When my servant offered this sauce to Boucher, the old man stuck his knife in it, took up a little on the blade, tasted it, then shook his head and said:
"Don't choose none."

There can be no greater mistake than to suppose that the man with $1,000,000 is a million times happier than the man with one dollar.

Death closed the eyes of Mrs. Ruth A. Hind in that peaceful sleep that knows no awakening in this world at her home in Walton, Monday night, and a most lovely woman has passed to her heavenly reward.

Mrs. Hind would have been eighty-two years old next December, her passing away was but the decree of nature, that the human machinery had spent all of its vital forces and death was a natural expectation.

For several years Mrs. Hind has been in delicate health. Mrs. Hind, whose maiden name was Richards, was born in Richmond, Madison county, Ky. in December 1828, and over half a century ago came to Boone county, and for over fifty years she was an inspiration to all that was good and noble by her daily walk in life, and the blessings of her pure and kindly nature fell as a benediction on the community in which she resided so long.

Her ambition and desire appeared in the betterment of every one, and her kindly ministrations were an encouragement to the harsh and unkind, and her strategic life was a blessing to all that were in need of her aid.

Her death is a great loss to the community, and her passing away was but the decree of nature, that the human machinery had spent all of its vital forces and death was a natural expectation.

tion made her beloved by everybody, and she was truly a mother in Israel.

From early childhood Mrs. Hind was a member of the Presbyterian Baptist church and a faithful, consistent member she always proved to be, as well as an earnest worker in the Master's vineyard.

She was united in marriage to Samuel Hind, who preceded her to the grave some years ago, as also did one son Samuel Hind, Jr. Her surviving children are Mrs. Justin J. Hudson and Mrs. John T. Boulton of Walton, and Wm. N. Hind of Covington, Master Commissioner of the Kenton Circuit Court.

The passing away of this beloved lady has brought sorrow to many hearts notwithstanding that death was naturally expected, but her life, devoted to the happiness of others and the severance of such tender ties bring great sorrow, and were it not for the promise of an eternal reunion in the sweet beyond there could be no solace to the sorrow stricken hearts.

The funeral services will be held Friday morning, Aug. 26th, at 11 o'clock, at the home of the deceased, to be conducted by Rev. H. C. Wayman of Walton, and Rev. John S. Steers, of Dry Ridge.

The meeting of the tobacco growers at Walton Opera House last Saturday afternoon was very largely attended and much interest was manifested in the proceedings, and when the sense of the meeting was taken as to pooling the tobacco this year the vote was almost unanimous.

The meeting was addressed by Hon. Robert H. Elliston, of Williamstown, Hon. J. G. Tomlin and others. It seems as if there will be no difficulty in getting the pool supported in this quarter.

Last Thursday, Mr. and Mrs. W. Lee Gaines indulged in a most entertaining and enjoyable evening at the Ladies' Aid Society of Walton Christian church and their friends at their beautiful country home near Kensington.

The occasion bore the annual picnic of the Ladies' Aid Society. The weather was delightful and the spacious grounds were nicely arranged for the occasion.

A continuous round of pleasure all day, the noonday intermission being heralded by a feast of all the good things to eat, and a luscious appetite to grace the bounteous supply of nicely cooked viands.

The attendance was quite large and all vied with each other to make the day a most enjoyable one. The following were in attendance: Dr. W. W. Evans and wife, Dr. B. E. Menefee and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Gaines, Mr. and Mrs. I. L. Hopkins, Mesdames Geo. W. Rensler, Rickley, Shafer, Julia West, R. C. Green, J. C. Mr. Walton says that at one time during that day Mr. Berkshire caught them so fast, and became so excited that he had to tie him to a tree until he could get them on a string. They left the writer in the promise to not tell anyone, so please do not ask any foolish questions.

UNION.

The new school building is under construction. Miss Mattie Riley has returned from the city. Miss Fannie Smith is spending a month with her father. W. W. Coughlin has purchased a nice runabout for his daughters. Mrs. Rachel Rice is visiting her brother, T. Wilson, in Shelby county. Mrs. Oscar Huey, of Somerset, is visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. James Kennedy. Mrs. Lucy Poindester, who is a sister of J. W. Coughlin, and Kennedy has been quite sick. Dr. Nunnally, a little niece who has been visiting him has returned to her home in Kenton county. B. L. Norman, who succeeded C. Coughlin in the grocery business has done well since he commenced. It is hardly worth while to mention his social qualities as they are so well known, but he has succeeded in business far beyond his expectations and time will show what success he will make.

It said beyond expression to be compelled to chronicle the death of our dear friend and relative, Miss Annie Riley, who departed this life at the age of 21, at the home of W. P. Corbin and sisters, after a heroic struggle of many months. For 19 years she made her home with J. H. Corbin and wife and had but recently moved to W. P. Corbin's, where all that was possible was done for her. She was loved by all who knew her and was of a delightful disposition and modest almost to timidity. She was sociable and kind, and a true friend to all who had affection to Christ. After she found she could not get well she prayed to the Lord to take her home as soon as possible so that she would not live with her brother, Ben Riley, of Covington, who was at her bedside for a week before she died. She was a devoted daughter of Thomas, of Missouri, and her remains lay to rest in the Rice cemetery, the casket covered with flowers and the pallbearers were her cousins. She will be greatly missed as Mrs. Corbin will be compelled to break up her home, keep and live with her brother and sisters.

His doctor thinks he will not be able to go to work again before November. For Sale—House of five rooms, ten acres of land in Walton, Tennessee. House of three rooms on property. Land in good condition. Well water. Apply at residence of J. W. Quiley.

RICHWOOD.

Richwood public school will begin Monday, September 5th. School at Kensington, district No. 43, will begin Monday, September 5th. Mesdames Mary and Elt Carpenter's spent Sunday at Cary Carpenter's. Mrs. Caroline Senior, of Erlanger, is the guest of her brother, Thomas Rice. Mrs. Will Dobbins, who was recently severely scalded by hot coffee is now threatened with palsy. We had a pleasant chat with Prof. Andy Collins at Erlanger fair. He is a cheerful product which we lend to Covington. The horse stolen from John Haysley's pasture over two weeks ago has not been recovered, nor has the thieves been captured. The women think men gain a little, and that it is awful. We noticed at the Erlanger fair that about two-thirds of the patrons of the wheels of fortune were women. Theodore Carpenter's valuable brown mare, Rockwood Belle, was found dead in the pasture of Estill, near Lexington, where she had been sent to be mated to Kentucky. Rome Respass is on a trade for two farms near here. While we would hate to lose any of our citizens we were glad to have Rome among us again, as he was raised here. The buggy occupied by Bernard Southgate and Mrs. Jane Connor broke down as they were going to the city, but they secured another conveyance and proceeded on their way.

Dode Carpenter's yearling Oranville captured the blue at Erlanger. She is a grand looking filly, and her speed qualities will be developed. One day she was offered for her $500 and the next day, $600. Two who were depositors in Richwood bank, owed the bank two notes which they failed to pay when the notes were due they had to pay them in full. They owed the bank and the bank owed them, then why could not they money tie up the bank's money? A test case and a beautiful argument may result.

HATHAWAY.

G. H. Baker is sick. E. A. Ryle and wife were quite ill the past week. Peaches are scarce in this neighborhood, and there is a good demand for them. W. S. White took a load of lambs to market, last week, for which he received $100. Several of the writers here attended the Erlanger fair last Saturday, and reported a good time and a good fair. Selly Conley shipped a fat cow to the city, one day last week for which he received a satisfactory price. James A. Atee has the house he is building here almost completed and the tenants will soon move into it. Charles Forest Brady delivered their 1909 crop of tobacco to the pool at Bellevue warehouse last Saturday. A good sized new house was last Thursday night, which refreshed things considerably and cooled the air until it is real pleasant. The threshing machines are rounding up all the little crops of grain, and will soon be ready to pull into their sheds. James Edward Swan, who was quite sick last week had to have a specialist from the city to attend her, is improving. Miss Juliet Reed spent the past week at the writer and family and enjoyed the scenery and pure, fresh air along the classic stream of Gunpowder. Several members of Big Bone church met at the church last Thursday and made ample preparation to entertain the crowd that will attend the North Bend Association which meets there on the 8th and 9th of September. Those that united with the Baptist church at Big Bone and were baptized were Misses Bettie Baker, Edith Kelly, Allie Hampton, Ora Rouse, Melvia White, Mary F. Allen, Anna Huey, Marietta Love, Allie Clements, and Messrs. Wm. McSwain, Cleveland Baker, Ernest McNeely, Charlie Wharton, Wilford Jones, Morris Lunford, Albert Lunford, Samuel Sterling, McMillan, David Clements and Miss Ethel Allen joined by letter from Gunpowder, making twenty in all.

The Lash of a Flend

would have been about as welcome to A. Cooper of Oswego, N. Y. as a merciless lung-racking cough that defied all remedies for years. "I was most troubled some at night," he writes, "nothing helped me till I used Dr. King's New Discovery which cured me. I am now well and am coughing at night now." Millions know its matchless merit for stubborn colds, obstinate coughs, sore lungs, laryngitis, whooping cough, hay fever, croup, or whooping cough. It relieves quickly and never fails to satisfy. A trial convinces. See the original bottle. It's got the entire force of the law being guaranteed by Bentley's drug store, Erlanger.

Grand Chief Colt Show

The Waterloo Horse Co. will also exhibit their fine collection of Grand Chief Colts.

Hubert Gaines went over to Poindester, Harrison county, Monday, after his two year old Dandy Jim colt, which Mr. Martin has had in training for several weeks. It was exhibited at the fair this week, tomorrow and next day. A postal card received at this office from R. J. Stephens, dated August 25th, and postmarked Estes Park, Colo., says: "I am up of the Divide today in my machine, I am out of the clouds. It is grand, and the roads are the best ever traveled, being fine air through the mountains. With some of our people could we them. Regards to all the boys."

P. G. Cropper, of Louisville, was the guest, last Saturday and Sunday, of his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Cropper, of this precinct. He is one of the company's best men. Atty. D. E. A GOOD LONG PRICE.

The Sale Will Ease Money Matters in Kentucky.

Lexington, Ky., August 20.-- Vice President A. L. Ferguson, Secretary G. A. Brooks and Messrs Fred Stacey and C. C. Patrick, comprising the committee of the Burley Tobacco Society who went to New York last Tuesday night, returned to-day. Ferguson, according to a statement given out from the society headquarters, said that the mission of the committee to New York was to discuss with certain parties, whose names are withheld, "a very flattering proposition in reference to the sale of the 1900 crop of tobacco, also an option on the 1910 pool," and Mr. Ferguson is further quoted as having said: "We went to New York and consulted with parties interested and discussed at length the various features of the situation. Of course, there are a great many details to be worked out in negotiations of this magnitude, but we have good reasons to believe that an agreement will be reached in a very short time. "We have always believed that a disposition upon the part of the tobacco growers to pool the 1900 crop will insure the sale of the 1900 pool. The sentiment in favor of the 1910 pool has greatly increased in the past two weeks and chances to sell the 1900 pool have increased accordingly. Every reason for a good sale at this price exists, for we have the best crop of tobacco in the world in the burley belt for many years. The growing crop is short in quantity and inferior in quality. We intend to take advantage of this very strong position and demand a record-breaking price for our holdings. In fine, we are meeting in present conditions to destroy our hope of success."

A Hair Dressing

If you wish a high-class hair dressing, we are sure Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, will greatly please you. It keeps the hair soft and smooth, makes it look rich and luxuriant, prevents splitting at the ends. And it keeps the scalp free from dandruff.

Does not change the color of the hair.

Formulate with each bottle. Show it to your doctor. Ask him about it. Then do as he says.

Ayer's
At the same time the new Ayer's Hair Vigor is a strong hair tonic, promoting the growth of the hair, keeping all the tissues of the hair and scalp in a healthy condition. The hair stops falling, dandruff disappears. A splendid dressing.

Made by the J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Others members of the committee are silent on the subject of their junket. The prevalent impression locally is that the committee was in consultation with representatives of the American Tobacco Company. The Executive Committee will hear a report from this Sales Committee to-morrow, and the District Board has been called to meet here Tuesday, September 8th.

Everett Walton, Ed Berkshire, Ben Cason and Andrew Acra, the last two living on Middle creek, spent last Thursday with the bass in lower Woolper creek, landing fine strings of these game fish. Mr. Walton hung one which he says was about 18 inches long, and when the excitement caused by the antics of the monster was over, and Mr. Walton took an inventory of his fishing outfit, all he had left was a fragment of a seine pole, the fish having made way with the hook, line and most of the rod.

Tobacco Speaking.

A good speaker will address the Boone county tobacco growers at the next meeting of the tobacco growers' association, to be held at the fair grounds, Monday, at 10 o'clock. The speaker will give a good address on the subject.

Considerable tobacco has been cut. All roads lead to the fair at Florence today and tomorrow.

William Graves, of Hebron, was transacting business in Burlington, Monday.

The local Baptist congregation were minus a minister last Sunday, hence there were no services.

Beaver, Union and Florence people are feeling good over the prospects of traction service at an early date.

There are several new advertisements in this issue which it will be to your advantage to locate and read.

Quite a delegation of Burlington people attended church at Hopeful, last Sunday night, and heard a good sermon.

Ed Sandford has reported to the Louisville ball club to go into training for the Chicago Cubs. Here's hoping he will make good.

Mrs. J. E. Smith took eight, and Miss Inez Gaines four premiums on the fancy needle work they exhibited at the Erlanger fair last week.

Charles White and Charles Henry Clure had 60 hogs on the market at Cincinnati, Tuesday for which they got nine and a half cents a pound.

Your complexion as well as your temper is rendered miserable by a disordered liver. By taking Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets you can improve both. Sold by all dealers.

The old toll house at Anderson's Ferry was moved last week by Contractor James Little and the force of workmen, thus allowing the C. & A. to straighten their tracks at that point.

The tackey party given one night last week by Miss Jonette and Pettie Revell was one of the most successful social events of the season. Guests were present from several neighborhoods.

M. L. Souther, of Idlewild neighborhood, called on the Recorder, last Thursday. In the afternoon he passed through town enroute home, having a nice, juicy, buggy hitched behind the one in which he was riding.

The aggregation of Kentucky ball tossers that was beaten 13 to 9 at Erling, Sun, last Sunday, was not the Boone's line-up by considerable, although the Boone's had been advertised extensively to play there that day.

The Boone Educational Agency, Everett L. Dix, manager, has its headquarters in Burlington. Its business is to take subscription for any book or periodical you may desire. Give the agency your business in that line.

Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. Sold by all dealers.

Sheriff B. B. Hume's pacer took first money in two races at the Erlanger fair. In the first race it was driven by Mrs. Hume, while in the second race, in which the drivers were all women, Mrs. Hume handled the animal and made it an easy winner.

In an opinion which he gave to Prof. Elsworth Regenstein, Superintendent of Public Instruction Judge James Breathitt, appointed General, takes the position that Prof. Regenstein was appointed until the end of the term for which Prof. J. G. Crabbe was elected and he holds that no election can be held in November, to fill the position.

While the Erlanger fair, last week, was well attended the attendance was, probably, not so large as that of some of the previous years. The show of stock was good as was also the exhibits in Floral Hall. The races each afternoon were close and very exciting, the track being in good condition gave every starter a fair chance to show what it could do. Numerous and varied amusements were on the ground for the entertainment of those for whom the exhibition in the ring was not sufficiently exciting. The directors claim that the four days' fair last week placed a handsome balance on the right side of the ledger for this year.

For Sale—Sow and seven pigs. Apply to Sam Hall, Burlington, W. A. N. B. To rent a good farm about 50 acres. Apply to G. B. Lipscomb, Richmond, Ky.

For Sale—Lot No. 1 Seed Rye and pair 2-year old mules. Apply to M. L. Souther near Idlewild. Those who own or have on account of the 1898 season of my horse must come forward and settle. T. B. Randall.

Don't the above picture appeal to you as an invitation to attend the fair at Florence this week? That amphitheater is certainly an inviting place from which to view the exhibition of fine stock and between shows you can enjoy the company, it may be, of some old friend whom you have not met for years. Did it ever occur to you that to Boone county people the Florence fair is very much of a home coming. Every year many of them who have cast their lots among strangers, hundreds of miles from their native heath, return during the fair, which they attend for the purpose of meeting those with whom they were raised but time and distance have separated. It may be, reader, that some of those people will be looking for you at the fair this week and will be greatly disappointed if you are not there to extend them a happy greeting. There is no place like the Boone fair for Boone county people to assemble annually and mingle with each other. Such meetings destroy the clannish feeling that is liable to possess people where they are not brought together as at a county fair. Spend two or three days at your county fair each year, get better acquainted with your county's people and you will be benefitted thereby. A person who keeps to himself all the time becomes stale and selfish and never sees any of the bright side of life. It was intended that man should be a sociable being, and to be such he must meet his fellowman on just such occasions as the Florence fair has always proven to be.

WORK BEGUN

On the Covington and Carrollton Traction Road.

Big Bone Not on The Map.

The following article which appeared in last Friday's Time-Star was authorized by parties who are on the inside and know whereof they are speaking in regard to the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton Traction railway.

"The line in the construction of the Covington, Big Bone and Carrollton railway, is to bring the population of 50,000 people to the doors of Cincinnati, will be struck Monday, when workmen begin excavating the line running south from Hawthorn Ave., Covington, to Crescent Springs, Ky. The line is to cost $2,000,000 and it will take a year to build. The company is capitalized at two millions, of which $1,000,000 is already paid in. "Big Bone appears in the title of the company, as it was originally intended the line should pass through Big Bone Springs, but that route has been abandoned because of what are said to have been prohibitive prices for the right of way."

"J. J. Weaver, manager of the Lagoon, formerly a member of the Southern railroad and later city engineer of Ludlow, will be in charge of the construction of the line. He has been active in promoting. Among those associated in the enterprise are: President Koch, Cambridge Springs, Covington; President Wm. Bicklin, Bavarian Brewing company; M. J. Crouch and J. W. Kennedy, Union, James G. Carrollton, O. P. Schmidt and R. S. Holmes, Covington. "To complete the line within the time specified, it is estimated that more than $5,700 a day. Work will be begun at the Carrollton end two weeks hence, and the foundation of the power house will be put down before winter sets in. About 1,500 men will be employed in construction work."

"The line will have its Southern terminus at Carrollton, the county seat of Carroll county, where there is a population of 15,000. Coming north the main line will pass through the Erlanger, Crescent Springs, Ludlow and West Covington. Out of Crescent Springs there will be a branch into Covington, known as the Hawthorn Avenue line. The main line out of Crescent Springs, will parallel the Cincinnati Southern to the Lagoon, pass through that park into Dover Hill street and thence to the Ohio river, where it will take up the line of what is called the river road, which has been surveyed but has never been built. In Covington the road merges into Second avenue, along which the line will run to Russell and thence to the terminus in Pike street."

"This new line will be a feeder for Cincinnati, Ind., and Gallatin county, Ky., each of which has an estimated population of 7,500. Communication with the former will be by the ferry at Neway, Ind., and with the latter through the ferry at Warsaw, Ky. Boone and Kenton counties, Kentucky, both of which will be traversed by the new road, have populations of 10,000 each.

"Carrollton is now three and a half hours distant from Cincinnati by the Louisville & Nashville railroad. The trolley road will be built and equipped to reduce this time to an hour and forty-five minutes. The power-house will be built on the Ohio river at a point 20 miles this side of Carrollton and will have duplicate plants, each with a capacity of 2,700 horse-power. The initial passenger equipment will be ten 30-foot cars, of latest design. There will be two 400 horse-power locomotives for hauling freight."

"Big Bone people will miss the opportunity of their lives if they permit the traction road to get away from them. Dr. M. J. Crouch, of Union, president of the Traction Company, informed the Recorder, Monday, that there are a few people along the proposed route of the road in this county, who have not signed up the right of way over their lands. They will be given another opportunity in the next few days and it is hoped that they will not hesitate longer to fall in line, and let Boone county have but few condemnation suits, but would be better let her have none at all. In helping this road you are helping yourself although you may not realize this fact."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(By Supt. Riley.)

The time for the opening of schools is here and Boone County schools offer to the students of our county the opportunity for education.

There are a few schools in some of the rural districts that have inexperienced teachers. Quite a few of our teachers are not as thorough and careful as they should be. The use of reference works and dictionaries must be encouraged.

Our normal schools and training for a large number of teachers. We have applications now from teachers with State Certificates for places. We want to help our teachers hold their places. We will help them to do faithful work and failure to prepare will mean the loss of position. Now let us begin together and work together throughout this session. Let us read our magazines and get every new idea from them we can.

Of our graded schools Walton stands first. Seven teachers do the work in our largest city. The High School is of the First Class. The future of this school is bright. One teacher was added to this department at Walton this year.

Petersburg and Bellview are of the second and third class High Schools respectively. The schools with their new buildings have a great opportunity. The co-operation of patrons and teachers will mean success. If you do not have good schools it will be because you do not want them.

Florence and Union commence their sessions as Graded Schools this year with additions to their buildings, and all helping it remains to be seen what these communities will develop. Boone has two county High Schools, one at Burlington and the other at Verona, the one at Burlington of the first class, the one at Verona of the third class. Tuition to all students of rural districts is free. To those from Graded School districts two dollars per month will be charged and students outside of Boone

Mrs. Mary Bennett Dead.

The old friends and acquaintances, who remembered Mrs. Mary Bennett as Miss Mary Kilgour, will be surprised to hear of her death which occurred August 30, at her late residence at Benton, Ky. She died of consumption of the stomach; was a sufferer of this dreadful disease only a short time when death relieved her.
She is survived by her husband and three children, two boys and one girl, five brothers and one sister. She was a woman of heavy weight, weighing two hundred and ten pounds at her death.
She was born on the Fern Leaf farm in Mason county some twelve miles from Mayvill, Ky., on August 2nd, 1829, and was 80 years old the day she died.
She was the daughter of the late Sarah Ann and John Picklin Kilgour, who later moved to Boone county on a farm known as Catalpa Cottage, where Mrs. Bennett spent most of her girlhood days. She attended the Kenucky State School for the deaf, being deaf herself from birth;
was educated there under Supts.
Jacob and Dudley, and in 1851 she graduated from that institution.
She attended eight years.
She was loved by all who were her associates at the institution, who will miss her and the later in 1883, September 24th, she was married to Mr. Riley Bennett, of Marshall county, the wedding taking place at the late Rev. C. C. tag by the late Rev. Kirtley.
They went to Benton, Ky., and resided ever since. Mrs. Bennett was a loving wife and mother and will be missed in the community where she lived and reared her children. Will H. Kilgour.

Boone County Convention.

The Christian Bible School of Boone county closed their ninth annual convention at Bellevue August 10th. The convention was one of our best in interest and enthusiasm. The speeches with the exception of Bro. Hopkins, State Evangelist, were by our own county men all intensely devoted to Bible school work.
Bro. Hopkins led the conference on Front Rank schools. It was so well received that five schools have entered the Front Rank campaign, and one, at least, expects to report a Front Rank school before the Owensboro convention.
All the schools were officially represented, one sending a delegation of forty-five. Four out of seven were reported on the Honor Roll, and one has since made the necessary requirement. We passed our State apportionment and for the third successive year Boone is classed with the banner counties.
One of the remarkable features of the convention was the presence of six workers who had been in Bible School work for over fifty years. A minor note was sounded by President, E. C. Riley, of our work. While we give them up reluctantly to extend a hearty welcome to their successors, who will find us always ready to cooperate with them in the advancement of Bible School work in Boone county.
Alpha Hanes,
Secretary of Boone County.

Scramble for Reward.

Although no one has been convicted for the murder of Alma Kellner at Louisville, a squabble is already on for the reward of over $5,000 which was offered for the capture and conviction of the murderer. Geo. E. Ellis, Chief of Houston, Texas Police Department, a lawyer to look out for his interests in the reward. He wants $3,000 or almost half of the entire amount. Chief Ellis says he was the first to discover the whereabouts of Joseph Wendling and he at once communicated the information to the Louisville authorities.

It Saved His Leg.

"Can be depended upon"

"Can be depended upon" is an expression we wish to hear;
and when it is used in connection with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy it means that it never fails to cure discomfort, dysentery, or any of the complaints. It is pleasant to take and equally valuable for children and adults. Sold by all dealers.

To The Tobacco Growers.

The farmers of Walton precinct have been pledging their tobacco very satisfactory to the pooling office. One of our men percent has declined the first invitation to join in the movement to pledge the 1918 crop.

Bro. Farmer, would you consider this matter immediately and not have the collector to make three or four trips to see you, and then complain that it's outrageous to pay to pool our tobacco? Our collector has made you a fair proposition, so join hands with us in this great movement, and let us not live only for our own selfish interest but for one another. You farmers that have been standing out won't you all do as some have already done, confess and say I won't haul my tobacco off in the night any more, while my neighbor is asleep and know at the same time he has made the price for me. Join in with us, we will forgive you and rejoice. We have one at Walton come and talk to him. He has made a complete confession and says he is ready to assist in any way possible. Look out for him, he may be to see some of you that have not signed.

And says, "Where few are gathered together there is no strength." Providence has been with the pool ever since it was started. The drought helped to cut out one crop entirely, and now has reduced the yield of the present crop to one-half.

The acreage in Walton precinct will be almost one hundred acres short of what it was last year. So, Bro. Farmer, of Boone county, we ask you to stand by our neighbors, Grant, Kenton, Henry, Galatin and Owen, and let us sing "In union there is strength, in division we'll fail so God be with us and we'll make a sale."

G. E. POWERS.

Some Pooled Tobacco Sold.

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 25.—R. D. Blackmore, representing the R. J. Reynolds Company, of Winston-Salem, N. C., arrived here to-day and held a conference with the officials at the Burley Society headquarters, arranging the details for the delivery of the tobacco from the 1908 pool which this company bought last week from the society. Mr. Blackmore was busy all day with the subordinate officials at the Burley headquarters making out the schedules of grades for the purchased tobacco which will be taken from the largest number of counties possible, so that the money received will be widely distributed among the growers in the pool.

It was stated to-day that the purchase made by the Reynolds Company was of 1,350 hogheads, or about 1,350,000 pounds. According to the announcement made by State Senator Burley at the Fleming county fair several days ago, the price paid by the Reynolds Company was 18 1/4 cents a pound.

Apparently the purchase of the Reynolds Company was the only sale made from the widely-harvested display of samples and offer of the pool for sale made by the society last week. While the sale of only 1,350,000 pounds out of 12,000,000 claimed by the society to be held in the 1908 pool is only a drop in the bucket, still it will help a little bit, and the money, aggregating about $270,000, when shared thru the Burley district will at least put a pleased taste for the present in the mouths of the growers who are being assured the money from their crops which are tied up in the pool.

It was positively denied at the offices of the Burley Society to-day that the sales committee of the executive board had, as rumored here last night, gone to New York for the purpose of negotiating a sale of the 1909 pooled crop with the American Tobacco Company.

The absence of President LeBus and several members of the executive board from the city was explained by the fact that Mr. LeBus and several of his associates are at Elizabethtown where they are pushing the 1910 pooling campaign in the Hardin, Hart, Larue, Barren district. Accompanying President LeBus are Messrs. Lister Witherspoon and Saunders, and they will make a number of speeches in the interest of the 1910 pool before returning home.

Don't Break Down.

Severe strains on the vital organs, like strains on machinery, cause breakdowns. You can't over-tax stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels or nerves without serious danger to yourself. If you are weak or run-down, or under strain of any kind, take Electric Bitters, the matchless, tonic medicine. Mrs. J. E. Van de Sande, of Ettrick, N. Y., writes: "What I did not break down, while enduring a most severe strain, for three months, is due wholly to Electric Bitters. Use them and enjoy health and strength. Satisfaction positively guaranteed. 50c at Benter's drug store, Binger."

There is a strong element of Ettrick citizens who want to make the town dry, and with that end in view they have filed in the Ettrick county court a petition asking that the local option question be submitted to a vote. If the vote is ordered Ettrick will have the warmest contest in its history, and the town will be the liveliest spot in this part of Kentucky for quite a while before the vote is taken.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is today the best known medicine in use for the relief and cure of bowel complaints. It cures griping, diarrhoea, dysentery, and should be taken at the first unnatural looseness of the bowels. It is equally valuable for children and adults. It always cures. Sold by all druggists.

Clothing Price Reduction

Every year clothing stores have their clearance sales and stock-reducing sales at reduced prices. And it is true that concessions are made. But the time has not yet arrived where any of these so-called sales can compete with us. The year round we give you the value and benefit of price. And why? Because:

First. We are manufacturers and buy our cloth by the bolt, not by the suit.

Second. We make every garment we sell at retail.

Third. We sell them to you at $9.95

Or just what the retailer must pay for his $15 and $18 suits.

Fourth. You get the benefit of our great buying power, the benefit of the manufacturer's profit and the benefit of the difference between the manufacturer and the retailer, because we sell direct to the trade.

Fifth. We guarantee every garment we sell, and keep it pressed and repaired free of charge for one year.

WHAT MORE CAN YOU ASK?

Come and inspect our suits and trousers. You will not obligate yourself to buy by doing so.

The Most Delicious Bread

You Ever Ate

It is now possible to secure right in this town the famous Dolly Bread baked by the Grocers' Baking Company of Louisville.

This bread, fresh from the oven is rushed to us by the fast express every morning.

It reaches our store almost as quickly as it reaches the grocer's right in Louisville.

Don't fail to give this bread a fair trial tomorrow. Give it the taste test. Serve one loaf of this delicious bread with one loaf of any ordinary bread. Then let the folks at your table decide which is best.

The answer is always certain. They choose

Dolly Bread

For everybody likes bread made with malt and baked in steam.

This bread is not baked in the ordinary way. It is baked in steam ovens—specialized to 400 degrees—installed by the Grocers' Baking Company at a cost of thousands of dollars.

Steam is forced into these ovens under enormous pressure—the moisture is baked right into the loaf. That is why Dolly Bread tastes so good—that is why it is so easily digested.

Her husband recently returned from Colon, isthmus of Panama, where he employed at a prosperous business. Mr. and Mrs. Stanifer were in the Philippine Islands for several years and prospered there, but they prefer their native land and are now located in New York where Mr. Stanifer is engaged in making fireworks.

Coppin's Big Department Store

It is pleasant to record that Democratic governors everywhere are nobly doing their part to improve political conditions, to abolish graft and corrupt practices, to control corporations, to enforce honest primary elections, to execute pure food and health laws and other reforms that honest people have been struggling for and that now seem in a fair way of accomplishment.

Governor Crothers, of Maryland, is one of the reformers who has brought about such reforms in his state, although not in a radical way, and is receiving the praise of all good Democrats and the commendation of honest Republicans. The good fight is not finished, it never is, for eternal vigilance is the price of the liberty that accompanies good government.

In addressing his German fellow citizens at the first Volkfest of the Liberty League of Maryland, the other day, Gov. Crothers gave some sound political advice, which is applicable to every state in the Union, when he said: "Some people are liable to think that our forefathers created such a perfect form of government that there is no need for care on our part in order to preserve it. This is a mistake. Each citizen owes it to his country, his state and his city, to give the best he has to their service. Germans make good citizens, because when they are convinced that a thing is right they stand firm as the rocks of the mountain. Such citizens can't help but be appreciated. You will never have a better opportunity to give your time and best thought to the problems of government. Baltimore in a few years will be one of the great cities of this country. You Germans have been in the forefront of the fight for civil improvement, and I urge you to keep on insisting that your servants in public office give time, thought, energy and integrity to the affairs placed in their hands."

These patriotic utterances were received with boundless enthusiasm by the thousands of liberty-loving members of the various German societies present, which shows that the people are ever ready to uphold the hands of those who lead them in the right path.

Roosevelt in 1912.

It looks like Roosevelt expected to be a candidate in 1912. Some of his enthusiastic friends have been talking about him but there was nothing to support their prophecies until the confidential friends, who visited him after the turn down for chairman, announced that he will be a candidate only if it is necessary to do so in order to carry out "his policies." That means that he is not satisfied with the administration and expects to contest the nomination two years hence. That means fun. And how will he set forth specifically the policy which he regards as his? It will be interesting to know what policies he regards as of such vital importance as to justify him in violating the precedent of a century. Are there any good policies that a Democratic victory would not protect--Commoner.

At East Enterprise last Monday the Democrats of Switzerland and Ohio counties nominated Hon. Geo. M. Kennedy, of this city, for Joint Representative. Mr. Kennedy was a member of the Legislature in 1901 and Joint Senator from Ohio, Kentucky and Franklin counties, serving as chairman of the committee on Agriculture during his term.

Free from Alcohol

Since May, 1906, Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been entirely free from alcohol. If you are in poor health, weak, pale, nervous, ask your doctor about taking this non-alcoholic tonic and alterative. If he has a better medicine, take his. Get the best always. This is our advice.

A sluggish liver means a coated tongue, a bad breath, and constipation. The question is, "What is the best thing to do under such circumstances?" Ask your doctor if this is not a good answer: "Take laxative doses of Ayer's Pills."

The committee of the Harley Tobacco Society that went to New York to close a deal for the remainder of the 1909 pool returned without having accomplished anything. They did not so much as ascertain whom the party they went to see represents. He had to be run down, and when found in the Adirondack mountains he was perfectly indifferent as regards the subject of the committee's visit.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(By Supt. Riley.)
More practical Arithmetic and Grammar should be taught in high schools and colleges use the last six months of the course in reviewing the common branches.

Spelling and Grammar should be taught in each of high school work in connection with other studies. Many teachers are beginning their public school term. They should spend their time in hard study and enter school at the end of the term they are teaching.

Do you expect to always teach at the same salary and in the same old way? Try giving the school a good live quotation each day for a month and then review them.

It has been decided by many colleges that not enough attention is paid to grammar and spelling in high school work. Four to six hours study each day will not do the right kind of class work in school. A few lessons must be studied at night.

The teacher who is thoroughly satisfied with his methods of teaching has reached a dangerous stage and had better watch his shell. The condition of the books of the children, the looks of the school house and the noise go much to tell what kind of a school is being taught. There must be a business like system in the methods.

A Man of Iron Nerve Indomitable will and tremendous energy are never found where Liver, Stomach, Kidneys and Bowels are out of order. If you want these qualities and the success they bring, use Dr. King's New Life Pills, the matchless regulators, for keen brain and strong body. Get at Bentley's drug store, Brainerd.

FAIR

EVER HELD IN NORTHERN KENTUCKY

Rings Filled With the Best Horses in the State.

Floral Hall, on Friday, Was Crowded With Things
Good to Eat

While on Saturday It Was a Bower of Beauty, Made
So by the Art Needle Work, Paintings, Etc.

The exhibition at the fair at Floral hall, last week, was a number, but the attendance for the three days was a couple of thousand or so short, consequently the receipts did not meet the expenses by about two hundred dollars.
The horse show never had its equal in Northern Kentucky, while the stock pens came up well with hogs and sheep. The cattle show was better than usual, and the exhibit in floral hall was seldom if ever equaled and never surpassed when taken as a whole.
On Friday it was packed with fancy needle work and the judges had many hard decisions to make.

Charles A. Johnson, who was present at the fair, and took part in the contest, was very successful, and won many prizes.

After the fair, the horses were judged, and the horses were the three days, with the exception of a few rings, in the hands of the judges, and later, Mr. Ward has the reputation of being one of the best judges of horses in the country.

The Horse's Prayer.

To thee, my master, I offer my prayer, O God, and take care of me. Be kind to me. Do not let the reins do not whip me when going up hill.
Go never strike, beat or kick me;
when I fall to understand what you want of me, but give me a chance to understand you. Watch me, I will be as good as your hiding, and if there is not something wrong with my harness.
Do not give me too heavy loads;
never let me where water will drip on me. Keep me warm and dry. Examine my teeth when I fall to eat; I may have an ulcerated tooth. That you know, is very painful. I am sure I will tell you in words when I am sick; so watch me, and I will try to tell you by signs. Let me sometimes enjoy it, and I will learn to love you. Protect me in summer from the hot sun. Keep a blanket on me in winter weather, and never put a frosty rain in my mouth, but hold it in your hands a moment first. I carry you, pull you, wait patiently for you long hours day or night, and I am sure I will I am thirsty; give me clean, cool water often in hot weather.
Finally, when my strength is gone, I am old, turning me over to a human brute, take my life in the easiest and quickest way, and your God reward you in this life and in Heaven. Amen.

A Chance to Get a Farm.

Uncle Sam is looking for 500 practical farmers who would like to own homes of their own. The Government now has about five hundred farms to be sold, and under the various irrigation projects in the Northwest. These farms vary in size from 30 to 80 acres of arable land, depending upon location. In many sections a tract of grazing land has been included in the farm unit, bringing the total up to 100 acres.

There is no drawing or element of chance in applying for one of these farms, it is only necessary to make a homestead entry at the local Land Office. The farms are free to every bona fide homeseeker who is entitled to make a homestead entry, the only charge, besides the regular land office fee for filing being the actual cost of getting water to the land.
Payment of principal and interest installments, without interest.

Owing to the rapidly diminishing area of unoccupied public domain, opportunity to secure a desirable farm land are becoming more rare each year, and it is doubtful whether the present favorable conditions will ever occur again.

The farms now awaiting settlement include a wide variety of soil and climate. If you desire to engage in general farming, or to specialize in the growing of apples, alfalfa, sugar beets, garden truck, stock raising, dairying, or if you are a professional or business man and wish to locate in a new town in a growing agricultural community, write to the Reclamation Department, United States Reclamation Service, Washington, D. C.

A remarkable Kentucky family in the Rowen county Cavdill, consisting of father and mother and fifteen children. The children consist of ten sons and 5 daughters, and all are in robust health.
Though the Cavdills have been married for forty-four years, they took no more than 50 years old each. Their five girls have all been married, and have become men, and of the ten brothers, three are lawyers, two are bankers, five are merchants, and all are successful in their respec-tative professions. The Cavdills are substantial citizens in their section of the State. There are two pairs of twins among the 15 children.
R. E. Cavdill is one of the elder twins. He and his brother, Edward, were married together; their courtship was done together; they were married on the same day by the same minister at a double ceremony; their honeymoon was spent together, so to speak, and each couple had three children, all red-haired.

In an opinion which was asked for by W. S. Fitzgerald, of Danville, president of the State Jailers' Association, Attorney General James Breathitt holds that present jailers cannot receive increased compensation which was allowed by act of the last Legislature. He holds that this would be changing the compensation of the officers during their term of office and for that reason can not apply. Jailers who may be elected this year can get the increased cents a day for maintenance of the prisoners, but the present jailers will have to peg along on the old allowance of fifty cents.

SENATOR PAYNTER

IS A PIONEER IN PUSHING LEGISLATION FOR THE PEOPLE.

Holds Place on Many Important Committees.

His Decisions on the Kentucky Apportionment Bill Supported by the United States Supreme Court.

Frankfort, Ky., April 15.—Few United States senators in the middle of a first term have had as much cause to feel satisfied with the standing they have attained as Thomas H. Paynter, of Kentucky. Not only are his committee assignments all that he or his friends could reasonably have desired and expected, but during the three years and little more that Senator Paynter has been in the upper branch of Congress he has made a number of speeches that have been pronounced decidedly creditable.

He has from time to time, when he really had something to say and felt that he could accomplish something for the benefit of his constituents or for the general welfare of the nation, presented his views.

Meigs Shape Legislation.

As will be shown further along in this article, Senator Paynter has accomplished considerably in the way of legislation during his term. He is a member of seven committees, and six of them are rated as important ones. The committees on which he is serving are: Judiciary, Philippines, Privileges and Immunities, District of Columbia, Industrial, Expositions, Claims and Investigate Trespassers Upon Indian Lands.

T. H. PAYNTER, United States Senator from Kentucky.

It will be seen at a glance that his work on practically all his committees calls for activity, for there are many bills of local, national and international interest to be considered.

He served three terms in the House of Representatives, having become a member of that body during the memorable Fifty-first Congress when Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, was its Speaker. It was by his action in Congress that the direct tax collected by the United States was refunded to the several states. In the previous Congress, which was Democratic so far as the House was concerned, there was a stubborn filibuster against this proposition, led by Representative Jim Burnes, of Missouri; William C. Oates, of Alabama, and others.

When the bill was passed in the Fifty-third Congress Mr. Paynter was the only Kentucky Democrat member of the House who worked and voted for it, and as a result of his efforts Kentucky got over $600,000 in cash, and the whole amount was placed to the credit of the school fund and is now drawing 5 per cent interest.

Law Made It Sacred.

It was later made sacred by the constitution of the state, and therefore can not be used for any other purpose.

Mr. Paynter served three terms, or six years, in the House, and was for four years a member of the elections committee while the Democrats were in control. This brought him into prominence on the floor in connection with the contests that were decided. In his six years' service there he also took part in the tariff debates on two of those bills that became laws—the McKinley and the Wilson bills.

Elected Kentucky Judge.

While a member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Paynter was elected a judge of the Kentucky Court of Appeals for a term of eight years, and was re-elected for another term, serving altogether twelve years, on that bench, when he was given his present term in the United States Senate by the voters of the state.

During his first term on the bench the greatest question, perhaps, which arose was decided by the court of appeals. It was whether the banks of the state had an irrevocable contract with the state that exempted them from the payment of county and municipal taxes.

The court stood four for the irrevocable contract and three against Judge Paynter, who was the dissenting opinion. The state then paid the taxes on the banks.

Judge Paynter was elected to the Senate for a term of six years, commencing March 4, 1917, and was re-elected in December of that year, when he actively entered upon the discharge of his duties in the upper branch of Congress. At the very beginning he took part in the discussion upon the financial bill. During his first session he vigorously urged the passage of a law to relieve growers from the tax on leaf tobacco sold by hand. The Senate had steadily refused to give them any relief.

The next year during the extra session called by President Taft for the special purpose of revising the tariff the matter was again under discussion in the Senate, and Senator Paynter made a strong and what proved later to be a convincing argument for the proposition. He also urged, before the Democratic caucus that this relief should be given the growers of tobacco in Kentucky and in the other states in which the staple is produced. His fellow Democrats assured him they would be solid for the proposition and they were, and with some Republican support it went through, and the Republican leaders had to submit. The relief finally came, though not as full as had been hoped for.

Senator Paynter participated from time to time in the tariff debate during the special session, and throughout the long contention never cast a vote for the increase of duty upon any article, but voted always in favor and collect duties upon a revenue basis.

Assigned to Judiciary Committee.

It is considered a high compliment for any one to be assigned to membership on the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Most of the lawyers in the Senate hope sooner or later to get a place on this committee. Many of the newer Senators have aspirations in this direction, but they are not selected even when their chances appear to be good. After serving only two sessions the Democratic Steering Committee and the Republican Committee on Committees unanimously decided to increase the membership of the Judiciary Committee in order to give Senator Paynter a place on it. It was an unusual a compliment as it was a flattering one that the Kentucky Senator had extended to him.

Among many other pieces of legislation Senator Paynter has been prominently connected with the following he may be cited as evidence of his activity:

He aided in passing a child's labor bill for the District of Columbia, intended to be something of a model for the rest of the country.

Work Against Loan Sharks.

He assisted in passing a bill to protect the people of the city of Washington against the loan sharks of the District of Columbia, and secured amendments to prevent future extortion. Under the provisions of the measure passed by the Senate the rate of interest was heavily reduced, penalties were prescribed and the making of contracts was regulated.

Employers' Liability Act.

He secured the adoption of an amendment to the employers' liability bill, conferring concurrent jurisdiction upon state and federal courts. An important provision of the bill is that when an action is brought in a state court it can not be removed to a federal court, but must be tried there.

Concerning this amendment Senator Hale said:

"This is a noteworthy advance in the direction of maintaining the constantly dwindling forces of state jurisdiction and state control. So, for one, I believe in every form of litigation that will preserve the right of the states, the right, as I believe, as originally contemplated by the framers of the constitution. I congratulate the senate upon having taken the first step in the right direction."

Spoke on Railroad Bill.

Senator Paynter participated in the debate during the present session on the railroad rate bill, and spoke several times on various important questions arising while it was under consideration.

He offered another amendment that provided that when a rate went into effect and the question of the right of the railroad to increase the rate was in litigation the railroad company, until it was settled, should give the shipper a receipt showing the amount paid under the increased rate, and what it would have been under the old rate; and if it was finally found that the old rate should stand then the carrier should pay to the party paying the freight the difference between the old and the increased rate, and it should be paid at the office of the carrier where it was paid, upon presentation of the receipt or bill of lading, thus avoiding litigation or adjustment of accounts.

This clause in the railroad bill, and which Senator Paynter offered, was passed unanimously by the senate.

On the Bribery Committee.

Senator Paynter is a minority member of the special committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the bribery charges in connection with the election of Senator William Leavelle. The investigation will be completed at Chicago, September 10, next, and is looked forward to with interest.

On the Federal Circuit.

Senator Paynter is a minority member of the special committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the bribery charges in connection with the election of Senator William Leavelle. The investigation will be completed at Chicago, September 10, next, and is looked forward to with interest.

Tell Your Friends How Delicious This Bread Is

Tell them that it is now possible to secure the famous Dolly Bread in this town.

This bread is baked in the great sanitary ovens of the Grocers' Baking Company of Louisville, and each morning it is rushed to us by express, reaching us almost as quickly as it does the grocers of Louisville.

And tell them, too, how much better this bread is than that baked at home—they will appreciate your kindness—for nobody likes to bother with home baking.

Dolly Bread

The secret of good bread lies in the oven, you know. Dolly Bread is simply delicious because it is baked in great ovens into which steam is forced at great pressure—in this way the moisture is baked right into the loaf.

Three of the best flours in the country are blended by our secret formula to secure its wonderful flavor.

These are some of the reasons why Dolly Bread tastes so good.

Mrs. Louise Lermond, one of our beloved ladies, died at her home here last Saturday night after a lingering illness from typhoid fever.

Mrs. Lermond was taken ill several weeks ago and her relatives did what they could to spare her. She was employed as a nurse and giving her every personal attention and having the services of an excellent physician, but this disease could not be combated and death came as a relief to all suffering.

Mrs. Lermond was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. and Martha Stamler and was born in Walton, Ky., in 1887, making her forty-three years old at the time of her death. The deceased was united in marriage to Dr. Devis Lermond, a native of Connecticut, in Cincinnati in 1893, and they enjoyed the happiness and pleasure of each others lives for ten years, he preceding his wife to the grave, dying July 22, 1905.

Mrs. Lermond's entire life was spent at Walton, and she was beloved by everybody for her intrinsic qualities of character, her charitable disposition and her kindness to everybody. She was greatly beloved by her relatives and friends.

Her husband generally had words of praise for her goodness and kindly disposition, and all drop a silent tear to the memory of a good woman. The funeral took place Monday afternoon from the Walton Christian church, the services being conducted by Rev. Edgar C. Riley, of Lexington.

A large number of surviving friends and relatives, after which the interment took place in the Baptist cemetery near Lexington. Mrs. Lermond was survived by five brothers, viz: John, William and George Stamler of Walton; Harry Stamler of Paris, and Edward Stamler of Lexington.

Some Dry Seasons. An interesting record is that of the severe droughts as far as the landing of the present year is concerned.

In the summer of 1862, seventy-five days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1862, eighty days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1869, eighty-five days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1870, ninety-two days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1872, one hundred and twenty-three days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1882, twenty-eight days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1886, twenty days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1871, forty-two days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1874, twenty-six days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1878, twenty-six days in succession without rain.

It will be seen that the longest drought that ever occurred in America was the summer of 1872. No rain fell from the 1st of May until the 1st of September, making 123 days without rain. Many of the inhabitants sent to England for hay and grain.

In these days of Stand-pat Republicans and Insurgent Republicans, some very peculiar Republican doctrines are being announced.

Take as an example the following extract from President Taft's declaration of belief before the Conservation Congress in St. Paul, Minnesota, last week:

"In these days there is a disposition to look too much to the Federal Government for everything. I am liberal in the construction of the constitution with reference to Federal power, but I am firmly convinced that the only safe course for us to pursue is to hold fast to the limitations of the constitution and to regard as sacred the powers of the state."

The Courage of Captain Plum

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Illustrations by Magnus G. Kettner

SYNOPSIS.

Captain Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and counselor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts him and tells him he is expected to show Plum the Mormon town. St. James, Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilac.

For several minutes Captain Plum stood as if the sudden apparition had petrified him. He listened long after the sound of retreating footsteps had died away. There remained behind a faint sweet odor of lilac which stirred his soul and set his blood fighting. It was a beautiful face that he had seen. He was sure of that and yet he could have given no good verbal proof of it. Only the eyes and the odor of lilac remained with him and after a little the lilac drifted away. Then he went back to the log and sat down. He smiled as he thought of the joke that he had unwittingly played on Obadiah. From his knowledge of the Beaver Island Mormons he was satisfied that the old man who displayed gold in such reckless profusion was anything but a bachelor. In all probability this was one of his wives and the cabin behind him, he concluded, was for some reason isolated from the harem.

"Evidently that little snail is not a flirt," he concluded, "or she would have given me time to speak to her." The continued absence of Obadiah Price began to fill Captain Plum with impatience. After an hour's wait he reentered the cabin and made his way to the little room, where the candle was still burning dimly. To his astonishment he beheld the old man sitting beside the table. His thin face was propped between his hands and his eyes were closed as if he was asleep. They shot open instantly on Captain Plum's appearance.

"I've been waiting for you, Nat," he cried, straightening himself with spring-like quickness. "Waiting for you a long time, Nat!" He rubbed his hands and chuckled at his own harp. "I saw you out there enjoying yourself. What did you think of her, Nat?" He winked with such caudacious glee that, despite his own astonishment, Captain Plum burst into a laugh. Obadiah Price held up a warning hand. "Tut, tut, not so loud!" he admonished. His face was a map of wrinkles. His little black eyes shone with silent laughter. There was no doubt but that he was immensely pleased over something. "Tell me, Nat—why did you come to St. James?"

"He leaned forward over the table, an odd white head almost resting on it, and twiddled his thumbs with a derisive rapidity. "Eh, Nat?" he argued. "Why did you come?"

"Because it was too hot and uninteresting lying out there in a calm, dad," replied the master of the Typhoon. "We've been roasting for 36 hours without a breath to fill our sails. I came over to see what you people are like. Any harm done?"

"Not a bit, not a bit—yet," chuckled the old man. "And what's your business, Nat?"

"Sailing—mostly." "Ho, ho, of course, I might have known it! Sailing—mostly. Why, certainly you sail! And why do you carry a pistol on one side of you and a knife on the other, Nat?" "Troublesome times, Dad. Some of the fisherfolk along the Northern End aren't very scrupulous. They took a cargo of canned stuffs from me a year back."

"And what use do you make of the four-pounder that's wrapped up in tarpaulin under your deck, Nat? And what in the world are you going to do with five barrels of gunpowder?" "How in blazes—" began Captain Plum.

Obadiah Price came around the end of the table and stood so close to Captain Plum that a person ten feet away could not have heard him when he spoke.

"I know more than that, Nat," he whispered. "Listen! A little while ago—say two weeks back—you were beamed off the head of Beaver Island, and one dark night you were boarded by two dozen fellows of men who made you and your crew prisoners, robbed you of everything you had—and the next day you went back to Chicago. Eh?"

Nathaniel stood speechless.

"And you made up your mind the pirates were Mormons, snatched some of your friends, arrested your ship—and you're back here to make us settle. Isn't it so, Nat?"

The little old man was rubbing his hands eagerly, excitedly.

"You tried to get the revenue cutter Michigan to come down upon you, but the warden—his ho, his ho, wouldn't! One of our friends in Chicago sent quick work ahead of you to tell me all about it, and—Strang, the king, doesn't know!"

He spoke the last words in intense earnestness.

"You're right, Nat," he said, "but your ears are not so good as Sh-h-h-h!" He lifted a hand warningly and nodded sideward toward the path. Captain Plum listened. He heard low voices and then footsteps—voices that were approaching rapidly, and were those of women, and footsteps that were almost running. The old man caught him by the arm and as the sounds came nearer his eyes lightened.

"Don't frighten them, Nat. Get down!"

He crouched until he was only a part of the shadows of the ground and following him the scrawny Nathaniel slipped between two of the hummocks.

A few yards away the sound of the voices ceased and there was a hesitancy in the soft tread of the approaching steps. Slowly, and now in awesome silence, two figures came down the path and when they reached a point opposite the hummocks Nathaniel could see that they turned their faces toward them and that for a brief space there was something of terror in the gleam he caught of their eyes. In a moment they had passed. Then he heard them running.

"They saw not!" Captain Plum exclaimed.

Obadiah hopped to his feet and rubbed his hands with great glee. "What a temptation, Nat!" he whispered. "What a temptation to frighten them out of their wits! No, they didn't see us, Nat—they didn't see us. The girls are always frightened when they pass these graves. Some day—"

"Graves!" almost shouted the master of the Typhoon. "Graves—and we sitting on 'em!"

"That's all right, Nat—that's all right. They're my graves, so we're welcome to sit on them. I often come here and sit for hours at a time. They like to have me, especially little Jean—the middle one. Perhaps I'll tell you about Jean before you go away."

If Captain Plum had been watching him he would have seen that soft, mysterious light again shining in the old counselor's eyes. But now Nathaniel stood erect, his nostrils sniffing the air, catching once more the sweet scent of lilac. He hurried out into the opening, with the old man close behind him, and peered down into the startled gloom into which the two girls had disappeared. The lovely face that had appeared to him for an instant at Obadiah's cabin began to haunt him. He was sure now that his sudden appearance had not been Still Captain Plum hesitated.

"Who are you? Whom am I to follow?"

"A member of our holy Council of Twelve, Nat, and lord high treasurer of his majesty, King Strang!"

Before Captain Plum could recover from the surprise of this whispered announcement the old man freed himself and was patterning awfully through the darkness of the next room. The master of the Typhoon followed close behind him.

Outside the counselor hesitated for a moment, as if debating which route to take, and then with a prodigious wink at Captain Plum and a throatful of his inimitable chuckles, chose the path down which the master of the Typhoon followed close behind him.

by a pull of the gloves to do the same. There were three of these hummocks, side by side, and Captain Plum chose the one nearest the old man and waited for him to speak. But the counselor did not open his lips. Doubled over until his chin rested almost upon the sharp points of his knees, he gazed steadily at the bearded man, and as he looked it seemed as if a great dark, like a frost, that suddenly closed its wings. With a quick spring the counselor straightened himself and turned to the master of the Typhoon.

"You have a good nose, Nat," he said, "but your ears are not so good as Sh-h-h-h!" He lifted a hand warningly and nodded sideward toward the path. Captain Plum listened. WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brookfield, Mo.—"Two years ago I was unable to do any kind of work and only weighed 115 pounds. My trouble dates back to the time that women may expect nature to bring on them the Change of Life. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made me feel much better, and I have continued to use it. I am very grateful to you."

I am now enjoying—Mrs. SARAH LOVENBERG, 414 S. Livingston Street, Brookfield, Mo.

The Change of Life is the most critical period of a woman's existence, and neglect of health at this time invites disease and pain.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will so successfully carry women through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacement, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Opportunity of suffragist. Baroness Aletta Kopp tells in one of the magazines how the women of Finland came to vote. The fact is that women had to show that they could meet an emergency before the vote came to them. This was not had many opportunities to take the initiative in the world's history and they have not always responded when the opportunity came, but when a crisis, such as that in 1904, when the strike and the revolutionary outbreak in Russia took place at the same time occurred, they proved they could make peace by doing it. Not until England and the United States find the women helping them to bear some great trouble will they give them the right to vote.

Try to Come Back. Not long ago Lord Kinnaird, who is always actively interested in religious work, paid a surprise visit to a mission school in the east end of London and told a class of boys the story of Sampson. In introducing his narrative, his lordship added:

"He was strong, became weak, and then regained his strength, enabling him to destroy his enemies. Now, boys, if I had an enemy, what would you advise me to do?"

A little boy, after meditating on the secret of that great giant's strength, shot up his hand and said:

"A bottle of hair restorer."

Scandal. Mrs. Simmonds glanced at the scare headline: "Brawl! Robbery! Police at Sea!" and laid down the sheet.

"Now, look at that, Psi!" she ejaculated, repeating the headline aloud. "Here's a big city bank broke into by burglars, and the city police force all off fishin' somewhere! What a scandal!"—Judge.

Partly Made Over. "Weren't we engaged last summer?" inquired the girl. "Your face is familiar," altered the man.

"Well, I'll forgive you for not recognizing me. My hair and figure are new."

The Lash of a Fiend
would have been about as welcome to A. Cooper of Oswego, N. Y., as a merciless lung-racking cough that defied all remedies for years. "It was most troublesome at night," he writes, "nothing helped me till I used Dr. King's New Discovery which cured me completely. I never coughed at night now." Millions know its matchless merit for stubborn colds, obstinate coughs, sore lungs, la-grippe, asthma, hemorrhage, hay-fever, croup, or whooping cough. It relieves quickly and never fails to satisfy. NOTES.
The refreshment stand had a big day. The attendance was about 200 larger than last year. The baby and colt shows were the leading attractions. In the gentlemen's hitching contest Harmon Jones beat a his competitors a block. Time—1:33. In the ladies' hitching contest they had to go two heats before the contest could be decided. Time—1:45. Geo. Hammond, who is sorely afflicted with rheumatism was on crutches but got about pretty well in the crowd. John Clore, treasurer, wants all who took premiums to collect at once, as he does not want to be all day saying them. Jno. T. Craven, Wm. Craven, and Henry McGlasson well up in the eighties were enjoying the day with their old acquaintances. Geo. C. Goode, the Covington grocer, so popular with Boone county people, was having a delightful time. He appeared to know everybody. Lewis Clore, of Waterloo, left a good horse with rope hitch rein, at a large oak tree near a pond on Harvest Home grounds. The finder is requested to leave it at E. E. Kelly's store in Burlington. Miss Sallie Castleman was the best guesser on the ground and came within five of guessing the number of beans in a bottle. The prize was won in $5 worth of photographs. Kloc conducted this contest personally. The vote for the handsomest young lady was as follows: Mary Watt 68, E. Clemens 35, Alma Gekker 10, Mary Roberts 25, Mary Finnell 2, Ruth Kelly 3, Lola Beemon 6, Maude Pope 5, Bertha Beemon 2, Clara Anderson 1. When near John D. Aylor's, a clip on the single tree of a buggy driven by some Covington parties going to the Harvest Home, broke, and the horse became frightened and cleaning itself of the buggy ran into Burlington, a distance of three miles, before it was stopped. Besides considerable injury to the harness no other damage was done, although several persons and vehicles were met by the runaway on the road. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is today the best known medicine in use for the relief and cure of bowel complaints. It cures griping, diarrhoea, dysentery, and should be taken at the first unnatural looseness of the bowels. It is equally valuable for children and adults. It always cures. Sold by all dealers.

All the directors are requested to be present at this meeting. Policy holders are about as they cannot now vote by proxy. Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. Sold by all dealers.

The high price of pigs is paying havoc with the poor man's hog, though needlessly so; for if a man can not afford to buy a little pig which can be grown and fattened at little cost, he can not afford to buy high-priced pork.

Bank Exam.—The first part of the week and while here made an examination of the books of the Bedford Loan & Deposit Bank. He was pleased with the condition in which he found things and said it was no more than he expected from what he knew of the way the bank was conducted. He said that some of the borrowers were prompt in paying or renewing their notes and directed that payments or renewals be made when due as the department would not stand for past due paper. He said that renewals should not be made too often, and part of the principal of notes should be paid at each renewal. He gave the directors to understand that overdrawings of accounts would be condemned by the State Department as this is the worst kind of debt due a bank. Mr. Rogers seems to be qualified for the business and does good work.—Democrat, Bedford, Ky.

(Milton News.)
This is going to be the banner corn year in Trimble, and the corn stories that some of our farmers are telling beat the old time fish stories a block.

This week about winds up the peach crop for this season. Many thousand dollars have been calculated among the farmers of Trimble county.

An elaborate program is being arranged for the Confederate Reunion to be held in Milton the 25th of this month and efforts are being made to make it the best reunion ever held. There will be something doing every minute of the day, from morning until night, and a large crowd is wanted and expected. A number of the best speakers in the State will be here, and the music will be by the Elk's brass band of Madison. Trimble county never does things by halves.

In this issue again appears the notice of the time and places at which the tobacco growers in the county who have or may pool their 1910 tobacco, are requested to meet and elect a delegate to represent them in the election to be held in Burlington on the first Monday in October to choose a director for the society. This is a very important matter to those who have or will pool their tobacco and they should not neglect to attend their precinct meetings. There is no question but what there will be a 1910 pool, and the sooner it is completed the better it will be for those who have or may pool their 1910 pool. To hasten a complete sale of last year's crop it is necessary that this year's crop be pooled, which may result in 600000 pounds being disposed of at an early date.

Don't Break Down.
Severe strains on the vital organs, like strains on machinery, cause break-downs. You can't over-tax stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels or nerves without serious danger to yourself. If you are weak or run-down or under strain of any kind, take Electric Bitters, the matchless, tonic medicine. Mrs. J. Van de Sande, of Kirkland, Ill., writes: "That I did not break down, while enduring a most severe strain for three months, is due wholly to Electric Bitters. Use them and enjoy health and strength. Satisfaction positively guaranteed. 60c at Bentler's drug store, Erlanger."

Judge Cleary of the Kenton county court set yesterday as the day upon which he would hear the petitions of the voters in the election to be held in the town of Erlanger. He called the voters to the local option question in the town of Erlanger. The voters claim that many of the signatures on the petition are not those of legal voters of that town, and therefore the petition is not legal in that it does not contain the signature of the required number of legal voters. They will have a hot time in the old town for several weeks if the election was called yesterday.

It seems that the movement to have a county tobacco pool is a feasible one. It is true that a pool of such limited size can not hope to control the market, yet it will be big enough to get the best price that the market affords. The movement is merely nominal, and nearly all the money received will be net. The officers will serve without pay, and as they will be chosen from our best farmers and business men, they will be able to do more for the average grower than he could do for himself.—Winchester Democrat.

A slight bulge in one side of a form used in making the concrete foundation for the new school house has caused someone to start the report that the foundation has sprung, which is a mistake, as the supposed defect was in the wall when the form was taken down. The wall at that point is thicker than elsewhere, consequently cannot be weakened any.

To hasten the pooling of the 1910 crop of tobacco Mr. LeBau proposes that from twenty to twenty-five women in each county be appointed to visit the growers in the field. It is work in which a successful solicitor can make big money, as they are allowed about $100 for each acre that is pooled.

Don't waste your money buying plasters when you can get a bottle of Chamberlain's Salve for twenty-five cents. A piece of flannel dampened with this liniment is superior to any plaster for lame back, pains in the side and chest, and much cheaper. Sold by all dealers.

The straw hat season is drawing to a close and it is a good time to invest for next summer.

QUINTESSENCE
Glasgow, Sept. 8.—An epidemic of diphtheria is raging in the Ozark section of Adair county.

Georgetown, Sept. 8.—The Elk-horn Association of the Baptist church in session at the Georgetown College chapel with over 1,000 in attendance.

Frankfort, September 8.—Prison guards of the prisons at Frankfort's most prominent families were caught in the dragnet of Mayor Polsgrove, who is cleaning up the city by the fact that a daily supply of two quarts is gathered.

Georgetown, Sept. 8.—The unique feature of a second crop of strawberries on the farm of Charles Nichols, one of Scott county's most prominent farmers, has increased in interest by the fact that a daily supply of two quarts is gathered.

Glasgow, Sept. 8.—"Uncle Bob" Smith, a Confederate soldier, died at his home near town last night, aged 90 years. He was an old time drifter, and was highly esteemed by the white people. Until seriously afflicted a few months ago he was a man of remarkable memory and was very frequently sought by the younger generation for dates of past events and rarely if ever failed to answer correctly.

Glasgow, Sept. 8.—George Ward, a prominent farmer of Freedom, this county, was struck on the head by a sawing, which rolled on him yesterday afternoon, and had a narrow escape from instant death. He was loading sawlogs when he was caught by a chain and drawn over the wagon on which one log had already been loaded and another rolled on him, but was prevented from crushing him by an obstruction. He will recover.

Shelbyville, Sept. 7.—Prof. Geo. L. Sampson, one of the best known educators in Central Kentucky, died this morning. Prof. Sampson has been afflicted with locomotor ataxia and during the night fell from his bed and hurt himself. A physician was summoned and worked with him until two o'clock when he apparently became easy. This morning when members of his family went to arouse him they found him dead. Prof. Sampson was a native of Virginia.

Madisonville, Sept. 8.—John Ashby, Deputy Sheriff, shot and instantly killed John O'Bryan, colored, here to-day after the latter had resisted arrest and assaulted Deputy Sheriff Proctor Ashby. After the negro had assaulted Ashby a posse was organized and when Deputy Sheriff John Ashby discovered the negro the latter pointed a pistol at the officer, but was killed before he could discharge the weapon. A coroner's jury exonerated Ashby on the grounds of self-defense.

Mt. Vernon, Sept. 8.—The case of the Commonwealth against Jas. Refitt, charged with selling pool-tables, was on trial in the Circuit Court since Wednesday morning, and was to-day submitted to the jury, which promptly returned a verdict of not guilty. Refitt admitted the pooling and selling of the tobacco, but based his defense upon the fact that he signed the contract through fear and intimidation and under the belief that he would be injured in his person or property if he did not sign said contract. Refitt is a native of Nicholas County, and hauled his tobacco here one night last winter and sold it. The Burley Society has been prosecuting this case very vigorously.

Harlan, Sept. 8.—In a pitched battle between Stephen Ledford, Carter Unthank and Thos. Noe, Jr., at Wallins Creek, eight miles west of Harlan, Stephen Ledford was shot and instantly killed, receiving eight revolver wounds in his body. Carter Unthank was shot in the upper part of the left thigh and died three hours later. At the coroner's inquest testimony was adduced showing Ledford had received six shots from a forty-five and Noe, Jr., from a thirty-eight; that Thos. Noe, Jr., it is alleged, was carrying the forty-five and Carter Unthank the thirty-eight, and the coroner's jury returned a verdict charging Noe with the killing. These three persons had been together all day and seemed to be on excellent terms. Late in the evening they left Wallins Creek post-office and started up Terry's creek when they arrived at a point in the road where the affray began. There is no report from the scene of the trouble as to what or how it was started.

Important To Growers of Tobacco.
On the last Saturday in September, 1910, the growers of tobacco in Boone county, who have pledged or placed their tobacco crop for this year with the Burley Tobacco Society for sale, will meet at their respective voting places in the county at 3 o'clock p. m., or as near that time as may be practicable, and elect one of their number a delegate to represent his precinct in an election to be held at Burlington on the first Monday in October for the purpose of electing a director of the Society as provided in section 2 of the by-laws. The chairman and secretary of each precinct meeting will, at the close of the meeting, deliver to the delegate so elected a certificate of election, signed by each of the members of the precinct. In October, 1910, the delegates so elected will meet at the court house in Burlington at 10 o'clock a. m., and elect one of their number a director for the Society as provided by section 1 of the by-laws. T. P. CURLEY, Secretary, Boone County Board of Control.

Clothing Price Reduction

Every year clothing stores have their clearance sales and stock-reducing sales at reduced prices. And it is true that concessions are made. But the time has not yet arrived where any of these so-called sales can compete with us. The year round we give you the value and benefit of price. And why? Because:

First. We are manufacturers and buy our cloth by the bolt, not by the suit.

Second. We make every garment we sell at retail.

Third. We sell them to you at:

$9.95

Or just what the retailer must pay for his $15 and $18 suits.

Fourth. You get the benefit of our great buying power, the benefit of the middleman's profit and the benefit of the difference between the manufacturer and the retailer, because we sell direct to the trade.

Fifth. We guarantee every garment we sell, and keep it pressed and repaired free of charge for one year.

WHAT MORE CAN YOU ASK?

Come and inspect our suits and trousers. You will not obligate yourself to buy by doing so.

A TRAGIC DEATH.

Mrs. John Green a Most Estimable Lady of Big Bone Neighborhood Commits Suicide.

Mrs. Belle Green, aged about 30 years, and widow of John P. Green, of Big Bone neighborhood, who died about two years ago, committed suicide last Sunday afternoon by hanging. She was in her usual health and no cause for the rash act can be assigned. She lived at the old homestead with her three sons, Joe, Robert and William, but was at home alone at the time she took her life.

The body of the family being absent for the day, it was about 1 o'clock when one of the boys returned home, and not seeing his mother began a search for her, and it was about 3:30 o'clock that evening when her body was found in the hen-house suspended by a rope. The condition of the body indicated that she had been there several hours, and it is thought she committed the act shortly after 2:30 p. m., at which time her son William left home to go to Walton, where he attends school. Mrs. Green was a most estimable lady, and her tragic death cast a gloom over the neighborhood.

She had been a citizen for many years. She was a daughter of the late Joe T. Elliston, of Glencoe, Gallatin county, and had a large circle of relatives to mourn her death, among them being Hon. Joseph Elliston, of Covington; Mrs. A. G. DeJannette, of Williams town; and Mrs. Mary Adams, widow of Rev. Samuel Adams, brother and sisters of the deceased.

SYNOPSIS.

Captain Nathaniel Plum of the sloop Typoon, lands secretly on a remote island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and counselor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts him and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong man. Price leaves his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. He binds Nathaniel by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Price. Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to deliver a package to Price. Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near Price's cabin. She disappears, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's shooting of the sloop was the result of a plot by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Plum, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to return to St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time.

"Nat, you've got good red blood in you," he cried, whirling about. "Naty suppose you can hate as well as love?" "Lord deliver us!" exclaimed the astonished Captain Plum. "Hate—love—what?"

"Yes, hate," repeated the old man with fierce emphasis, so close that his breath struck Nathaniel's face. "You can love a pretty face—and you can hate. I know you can. If you couldn't I would send you back to your sloop with the package tonight. But as it is I am going to relieve you of your oath. Yes, Nat, I give you back your oath—for a time."

Nathaniel stepped a pace back and put his hands on his pockets as if to protect the gold there. "You mean that you want to call off our bargain?" he asked. The counselor rubbed his hands under the friction of them sent a shiver up Nathaniel's back. "Not that, O, no, not that! The bargain is good. The gold is yours. You must deliver the package. But you need not do it immediately. Understand? I am lonely back there in my shack. I want company. You must stay with me a week. Eh? Lilacs and pretty faces, Nat! Ho, ho!—You will stay a week, won't you, Nat?"

He spoke so rapidly and his face underwent so many changes, now betraying the keenest excitement, now wrinkled in an ogreish, basting grin, now almost pleading in its earnestness—Nathaniel knew what to make of him. He looked into the beady eyes, sparkling with passion, and the cat-like glitter of them set his blood tingling. What strange adventure was this old man dragging him into? What were the motives, the reasoning, the plot that lay behind this mysterious creature's apparent faith in him? He tried to answer these things in the passing of a moment before he replied. The counselor saw his hesitancy and smiled.

"I will show you many things of interest, Nat," he said, "I will show you just one tonight. Then you will make-up your mind, eh? You need not tell me until then."

He took the lead again and this time struck straight down for the town. They passed a number of houses built of logs and Nathaniel caught narrow gleams of light from between close-drawn curtains. In one of these houses he heard the crying of children, and with a return of his grisly humor Obadiah Price grinned him in the ribs and said: "Good old Israel! Long live there—two wives, one old, one young—11 children. The Kingdom of Heaven is open to him!" And from a second he heard the sound of an organ, and from still a third there came the laughter and chatter of several feminine voices, and again Obadiah reached out and prodded Nathaniel in the ribs. There was one great, gloomy, long-built place which they passed, without a ray of light to give it life, and the counselor said: "Three widows there, Nat—light like cats and dogs. Poor Job killed himself." They avoided the more thickly populated part of the settlement and the town, a few people, which seemed to please the counselor. Once they overtook and passed a group of women clad in short skirts and loose waists and with their hair hanging in braids down their backs. For a third time Obadiah nudged Captain Plum.

"It is the king's pleasure that all women wear skirts that come just below the knees," he whispered. "Some of them won't do it and he's wondering how to punish them. Tomorrow morning some of them will be public whipping. There's a warning for you."

He shivered with quiet laughter and dived into a great block of darkness where there seemed to be no houses, keeping close beside Nathaniel. When they came to the edge of a grove and deep among the trees Captain Plum caught a glimpse of a lighted window, unusual caution. He approached the light slowly, pausing every few steps to peer guardedly about him, and when they had come very near to the window he pulled his companion behind a thick clump of shrubbery. Nathaniel could hear the old man's subdued chuckle, and he bent his head to catch what he was about to whisper to him.

"You must make no noise, Nat," he warned. "This is the castle of our priest, king and prophet—James Jesse Strang. I am going to show you what you have never seen before and what you will never look upon again. I have sworn upon the Two Books and I will keep my oath. And thus—you will answer the question I asked you back there."

He crept into the darkness of the trees and Nathaniel followed, his heart throbbing with excitement, every sense alert and one hand resting on the butt of his pistol. He felt that he was nearing the heart of the day's adventure and now, in the last moment of it, his old caution reasserted itself. He knew that he was among a dangerous people, men who, according to the laws of his country, were criminals in more ways than one. He had seen much of their work along the coasts and he had heard of more of it. He knew that this gloom and sullen-quiet of St. James hid cut-throats and pirates and thieves. Still there was nothing ahead to alarm him. The old man dodged the gleams of the lighted window and slunk around to the end of the great house. Here, several feet above his head, was another window, small and veiled with the foliage of a vine that clung in dense masses to the log wall. With the assurance of one who had been there before the counselor mounted some object under the window, lifted himself until his chin was on a level with the glass, and peered within. He was there but an instant and then fell back, chuckling and rubbing his hands.

"Come, Nat!" He stood a little to one side and bowed with mock politeness. For a moment Captain Plum hesitated. Under ordinary circumstances this spying through a window would have been repugnant to him. But at present something seemed to call him that it was not to satisfy his curiosity alone that Obadiah Price had given him this opportunity. Would a look through that little window explain some of the mysteries of the night? There came a low whisper in his ear.

Breathlessly He Looked In.

"Do you smell lilacs, Nat? Eh?" The counselor was grinning at him. There was a suggestive gleam in his eyes. He rubbed his hands almost nervously.

In another instant Captain Plum had stepped upon the object beneath the window and parted the leaves. Breathlessly he looked in. A strange scene met his eyes. He was looking into a vast room, illuminated by a huge hanging lamp suspended almost on a level with his head. Under this lamp there was a long table and at the table sat seven women and one man. The man was at the end nearest the window and all that Nat could see was the back of his head and shoulders. But the women were in full view, three on each side of the table and one at the far end. He guessed the man to be Strang; but he stared at the women and as his eyes traveled back to the one facing him at the end of the table he could scarcely repress the exclamation of surprise that rose to his lips. It was the girl whom he had encountered at the counselor's cabin. She was leaning forward as if in an agony of suspense, her eyes on the king, her lips parted, her hands clutching at a great book which lay open before her. Her cheeks were flushed with excitement. And even as he looked, Captain Plum saw her head fall suddenly forward upon the table, unheeded by her arms. The heavy braid of her hair partly undone, glistened like red gold in the lamplight. Her slender body was convulsed with sobs. The woman nearest her reached over and laid a caressing hand on the bowed head, but drew it quickly away as if at a sharp command.

In his eagerness Nathaniel thrust his face through the foliage until his nose touched the glass. When the girl lifted her head she straightened back in her chair and saw him. There came a sudden white heat to her face, a setting of the eyes as if revealed her discovery! Strang could have shouted for joy. She had seen him, had recognized him! And because she had not cried out, she wanted him! He drew his pistol, signaled for him, if she called him, from its holster and waited. If she he would burst the window. The girl was talking now and as she talked she lifted her eyes. Nathaniel pressed his face close against the window, and smiled. The world let her know he was a friend. She seemed to answer him with a little nod and he fancied that her eyes glowed with a mute appeal for his assistance. But only for an instant, and then they turned again to the king. Not until that moment did Nathaniel notice upon her bosom a bunch of crumpled lilacs.

From below the iron grip of the counselor dragged him down. "That's enough," he whispered. "That's enough for tonight." He saw the pistol in Nathaniel's hand and gave a sudden breathless cry.

"Nat!" He caught Captain Plum's free hand in his. "Tell me this, Obadiah Price," whispered the master of the Typoon, "who is she?"

"The counselor stood on tiptoe to answer. "They are the wives of—Strang, Nat!" "But the other?" demanded Nathaniel. The other— "O, to be sure, to be sure," chuckled Obadiah. "The girl of the lilacs, eh? Why, she's the seventh wife, Nathaniel, all the seventh wife!"

CHAPTER III.

The Warning.

So quickly that Obadiah Price might not have counted ten before it had come and gone the significance of his new situation flashed upon Captain Plum as he stood under the king's window. His plans had changed since leaving ship but now he realized that they had become hopelessly involved. He had intended that Obadiah should show him where Strang was to be found, and that later, when ostensibly returning to his vessel, he would visit the prophet in his home. Whatever the interview brought forth he would still be in a position to deliver the counselor's package. Even an hour's bombardment of St. James would not interfere with the fulfillment of his oath. But those few minutes at the king's window had been fatal to the scheme he had built. The girl had seen him. She had not betrayed his presence. She had called to him with her eyes—he would have staked his life on that. What did it all mean? He turned to the counselor, twisting his hands nervously. He seemed half afraid, cringing, as if fearing a blow. The sight of him set Nathaniel's blood afire. His white face seemed to verify the terrible thought that had leaped into his brain. Suddenly he heard a faint cry—a woman's voice—and in an instant he was back at the window. The girl had risen to her feet and stood, facing him. This time, as her eyes met his own, he saw in them a flashing warning, and he obeyed it as if she had spoken to him. As he dropped silently back to the ground the counselor came close to his side. "That's enough for tonight, Nat," he whispered.

He made as if to slip away but Nathaniel detained him with an emphatic hand. "Not yet, dad! I'd like to have a word with this!" "With Strang's wife?" chuckled Obadiah. "Ho, ho, ho, Nat, you're a rascal!" The old man's face was mapped with wrinkles, his eyes glowed with joyous approbation. "You shall, Nat, you shall! You love a pretty face, eh? You shall meet Mrs. Strang, Nat, and you shall make love to her if you wish. I swear that, too. But not tonight, Nat—not tonight."

He stood a pace away and rubbed his hands. "There will be no chance tonight, Nat—but tomorrow night, or the next, O, I promise you shall meet her, and make love to her, Nat! Ho, if Strang knew, if Strang only knew!"

There was something so fondly glowing in the counselor's attitude, in his face, in the hot glow of his eyes, that for a moment Nathaniel's involuntary liking for the little old man before him turned to abhorrence. The passion, the triumph of the man, convinced him where words had failed. The girl was Strang's wife. He had no doubt was dispelled. And because she was Strang's wife Obadiah tasted the Mormon prophet. The counselor had spoken with fateful assurance—that he should meet her, that he should make love to her. It was an assurance that made him shudder. As he followed in silence up out of the gloom of the town he strove, but in vain, to find whether sin had lurked in the sweet face that had appealed to him in its misery—whether there had been a flash of something besides terror, beside prayerful entreaty, in the lovely eyes that had met his own. Obadiah spoke no word to break in on his thoughts. Now and then the old man's inane chucklings seemed softly to Nathaniel's ears, and when at last they came to the cabin in the tower he broke into a low laugh that echoed wittily in the great black room which they entered. He lighted another candle and approached a ladder which led through a trap in the ceiling. Without a word he mounted this ladder, and Nathaniel followed him, finding himself a moment later in a small low room furnished with a bed. The counselor placed his candle on a table close beside it and rubbed his hands with it seemed they must Shrewd Scheme Stopped Run. Many years ago, in consequence of a commercial panic, there was a severe run on a bank in South Wales, and the small farmers jostled each other in crowds to draw out their money. Things were rapidly going from bad to worse, when the bank manager, in a fit of desperation, suddenly be thought him of an expedient. By his directions a clerk, having hoisted some sovereigns in a trying-pan, paid them over the counter to an anxious applicant—"Why, my dear sir, you are not the latter as he took them up. 'Of course,' was the reply; 'what else could you expect? They are only just out of the mold. We are getting them by hundreds as fast as we can.' 'Conning them!' thought the simple agriculturist; 'then there is no fear of the money running short!' With this their confidence revived, the panic abated, and the bank was enabled to weather the storm.

A Good Hair-Food

Ayer's Hair Vigor, new improved formula, is a genuine hair-food. It feeds, nourishes, builds up, strengthens, invigorates. The hair grows more rapidly, keeps soft and smooth, and all dandruff disappears. Aid nature a little. Give your hair a good hair-food.

Does not change the color of the hair.
Females with each bottle show it to your doctor. Ask him about it, then do as he says.

You need not hesitate about using this new Hair Vigor from any fear of its changing the color of your hair. The new Ayer's Hair Vigor prevents premature graying, but does not change the color of the hair even to the slightest degree.

At last accounts Cliff Norman's horse and runaway that were stolen at Erlanger, last Sunday night, had not been recovered. They were stolen by a negro who had been working for Clarence Tanner, near Richwood, and the last heard of him was that Williamstown, headed towards Lexington.

"Can be depended upon" is an expression we all like to hear, and when it is used in connection with Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy it means that it never fails to cure diarrhea, dysentery or bowel complaints. It is pleasant to take and really valuable for children and adults. Sold by all dealers.

An important point in raising a good corn crop is the selection of the seed, and the selection made in the fall directly from the stalks will prove the most satisfactory method. This is important and cannot be emphasized too strongly. Prof. A. B. Moore of the College of Agriculture of Wisconsin University has just written a circular of information, No. 18, giving details on curing and testing seed corn.

BIG DAMAGE SUITS

Filed in The Boone Circuit Court By Mrs. Edith McAvoy.

Mrs. Edith McAvoy, of Kensington, has filed three damage suits in the Boone Circuit Court. One is against W. C. Moxley, jailer of the town of Walton, and also against W. Moxley. In this suit she alleges W. C. Moxley, did on September 17, 1909, without lawful authority, imprison her from 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. for which she asks $5000 damages.

She also sues George Ranier and William Ranier for $10,000, charging that they conspired together and assaulted and beat her on the 17th day of September, 1909.

The third suit is against Geo. Ranier and William Sandford, in which she charges that they conspired and wrongfully beat and took possession of her body and carried her from Kensington, Boone county to Walton, Boone county, without authority of law, and placed her in Walton jail without authority of law for six hours. She charges further that they broke into her residence and scattered her property about. In this suit damages of $15,000 are prayed for.

The above three suits grow out of the action taken in regard to Mrs. McAvoy the day after the burning of the residence of John Ranier, Kensington, last September, and for which the plaintiff in the above suits was arrested, but upon trial in the Boone Circuit Court was acquitted, the Judge giving a peremptory instruction on the evidence of the commonwealth.

RISING SUN

In A Turmoil Over The Good Work Of A Boone County Boy.

The little burg of Rising Sun is in a turmoil, and the town bell is being yanked off its rope by the delighted natives, while the night procession featured Monday night until the rain came down. Ed. Sandford, the son of Rising Sun, who is, therefore, a rising sun in base ball, and a rising sun in the town, pitched his first real game for Louisville, and got by. Sandford's showing was impressive. He had pitched parts of games during the past two weeks, and had done elegant work but Monday's tryout was the real thing. They put him on the slab when the score was 5 to 0 in favor of Toledo; he pitched seven innings, held the Toledo gang to five scattered hits, and finally won out in ten innings, 8 to 7.

Great work, and good evidence that the son of Rising Sun is a rising sun—oh, well, he's a pitcher. No wonder Rising Sun is celebrating.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES. (By Supt. Riley.)

Teachers of rural schools are requested to write the number of years they have taught on the margin of their first monthly report.

In every district there are children who ought to be in school. We do not have a compulsory law that is worth much. I urge every person who knows the value of an education to encourage all children to attend school. Teachers should urge the attendance of all pupils.

Why should not the ministers of the churches encourage the children of indigent parents? Why should not the leaders in lodges sound a note of enthusiasm for education? We urge all to help in this work that our country may have better attendance at our schools.

When a package of bananas was received by Farnish & Bradley this week, it was found to contain a vicious looking tarantula, an enormous spider about as large as a man's hand. It placed it in a glass fruit jar together with what looked like a large egg, and the next day the sides of the jar were covered with hundreds of the little ones that had hatched out during the night. CUT HALF IN TWO

The Burley Tobacco Crop, According to Report of Commissioner, Will Barely Exceed Fifty Per Cent.

Commissioner of Agriculture Rankin in his crop report for the month of August, says that there is only fifty-four per cent crop of burley tobacco raised this year. He says that the rainfall during the month of August was not so great as that of the preceding month but the rains came when they were badly needed and saved the crops from total destruction. In some sections of the State they are now badly needed and must come to save what is left of the crops. Tobacco, he says, has shown considerable improvement, and corn has shown a very marked improvement, but no conditions can arise that will make the crops as full as they should be, and would have been under favorable conditions throughout the year.

The State averages for the State follow: Yield of wheat per acre 11 bushels, quality of wheat 75 per cent condition of corn 73 per cent.
Yield of corn per acre 33 bushels, yield of potatoes per acre 100 bushels,
prospects for burley tobacco, 54 per cent, prospects for dark tobacco 58 per cent, condition of hemp 88 per cent, increase of live stock 14 per cent, decrease of live stock 45 per cent, price of poultry per pound 20c, price of eggs per dozen, 15c.

Take Plenty of Time, Girls.

"Young lady," said the village deacon, "I noticed that you have dropped your hook into the matrimonial net and are going nearly home already. Don't do it. You your head clear and study out the bites. You don't want to pull the cord the cork bobs a little. Just keep your head clear and your hand steady and wait until the cork goes clear under and begins to sail away into the clear water. That means there is a fish at the other end worth the landing. Too many girls make the mistake of pulling the first time the cork bobs a little, and they land a crawfish. Of course, some of them come back to fish a second time, but even then the experience fails to do lots of them any good. They take out the hook and the cork bobs a little; they yank away with might and main, only to find that they have landed another crawfish. Most anybody can land one of those things. Also most anybody can land a good fish if she has the patience."

Late Inventions.

chine to sell stamps automatically can be adjusted to fit coins of any denomination.

The inventor of a new pocket automatic gun claims its bullets will penetrate half an inch of

An automobile signal for railroad, the invention of a retired Dutch naval officer, explodes a cartridge behind a megaphone au-tomatically whenever a train enters a block in which there is another train.

Probably the most compact step ladder has been patented by an Illinois man, the steps folding into grooves in the sides when it is closed, so that it takes up no more room than a four inch plank.

An essential feature of a new Belgian motor car is a pair of large wheels at the end of an axle to serve to maintain equilibrium where the car is starting after which they are raised from the ground.

The wheat improvement lecturers in this fall to the farmers advised them to plant late this fall, on account of the fly, which has been rather too common the past season, and is likely to be worse next year. The wheat is sown early and the fall should be warm and the fly lay its eggs on the young wheat, when two or three inches high,
the larvae or maggots would hatch out next spring and damage the crop, but if the wheat does not start to grow till the weather is cool the fly must find something else to lay its eggs upon and the wheat escapes.

The Cincinnati Commercial Tribune of Sunday week contained a lengthy article and picture of Irving Brown, an ex-slave, who was born in Warsaw 102 years ago, being born in 1808. He was owned by Ruben Brown of New Liberty, Owen county, until freed by President Lincoln. Ruben claims he has $90 owing him by his late lect same. Ruben has been living in Cincinnati for 43 years, and is still hale and hearty.

"Look out for an early winter and a good stiff one, too," said a man who spends much time in trapping. He says the animals are already getting their winter fur on, and that squirrels are beginning to lay away stores of food, unusual to early fall. Woodchucks are already taking to their holes, and they never do until winter comes on early. According to him, the best time to set in early in October and stick right to the job in a good old-fashioned way.

CONVENTION

Republicans of Boone County instruct For J. G. Tomlin, of Walton.

The Boone county Republicans met in mass convention at the court house last Saturday afternoon. S. L. Edwards, of Walton, was elected chairman and Chas. Ransler, of Walton, secretary of the convention.

Delegates were appointed to the congressional convention which met in Covington, Monday, and to the judicial convention which met in Mayfield, on Tuesday.

The following resolutions were

We reaffirm our allegiance to the principles of the Republican party as enunciated by its great leaders and which have brought our beloved country to the highest state of prosperity and civilization, believing that a continuance of those principles will safeguard the interests of all of our people and add to the progress of the nation.

We endorse the wise and patriotic administration of President Wm. H. Taft as being in harmony with the declaration of the party for the best interests of all our people and the rebuilding of a sound and stable government; and we feel that the administration will add another page to the history of our illustrious achievements of the Republican party for a great government for the people, by the people and of the people.

We point with pride to the splendid record our United States Senator Wm. C. Bradley is making in the United States Senate and we feel that the high reputation of Kentucky is being fully sustained by this worthy Republican who has been honored by election to the U. S. Senate from Kentucky and we approve his course and his ardent support of the National Administration.

We endorse the administration of Governor Wilson as being honest, progressive and for the upbuilding of our civil institutions, the preservation of law and order, and we note the increased efficiency of the various departments of the State government under the wise direction of Gov. Wilson and his able advisers.

We appreciate the fact that the safety of the rights of the people depend largely on the purity of the judiciary and particularly on the selection of the judges of the higher courts where the principles of the law are expounded and promulgated on the basis of justice and equity to all, and realizing that it is necessary to have good and pure men in the position of judges, and knowing that Hon. J. C. Thomas is of the highest type of moral integrity, and trustworthy in every degree, with a full comprehension of what constitutes justice in all legal matters, and taking pride in its dispensation, and being intellectually qualified in every way, we heartily recommend him for the nomination of judge of the Sixth Appellate Court District, and instruct our delegates to secure his nomination and election by all honorable means.

The Lash of a Fiend would have been about as welcome to A. Cooper of Oswego, N. Y., as a merciless lung-racking cough that defied all remedies for years. "It was most troublesome at night," he writes, "nothing helped me till I used Dr. King's New Discovery which cured me completely. I never coughed at night now." Millions know its matchless merit for stubborn colds, obstinate coughs, sore lungs, influenza, asthma, hemorrhage, hay-fever, croup, or whooping cough. It relieves quickly and never fails to satisfy. Trial convinces. 50c per bottle. Trial bottle free. It's positively guaranteed by Bentley's drug store, Erlanger.

Mr. Monte Fox, representing Joseph Stern, of New York, has purchased 500 head of export cattle in the counties of Scott, Bourbon, Lincoln and Boyle in the past week. The cattle averaged about 1,400 pounds and with the exception of a very fine bunch bought from Bedford, of Bourbon, all were purchased at 7 cents a pound. Mr. Fox paid $225 per head for the Bedford bunch. The total purchases cost $50,000. Mr. Fox has purchased and shipped to Stern since the first of the year over a million dollars worth of export cattle. Danville Advocate.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Regenstein to-day made state reports of the money that will be expended this year in the common schools of Kentucky, making a total of $3,057,481.35. The source from which this revenue is derived follows: Dog tax $20,384.10, interest $21,434.53, balance from last year $1,084.67, state fund $9,063,864. There are 745,380 school children, and the school fund is $1 per capita on that number.

The National Association of Mexican War Veterans at the close of the meeting at Indianapolis recently was disbanded. Some State organizations will be kept up, but the National organization will no longer exist, as the old warriors are too poor and too infirm to undertake journeys such as these national reunions impose upon them.

Don't waste your money buying glasses when you can get the best of Chamberlain's Liment for twenty-five cents. A piece of flannel dampened with this Liment is superior to any plaster for lame back, pain in the side and chest, and much cheaper. Sold by all dealers.

The Louisville Republican who has offered him $25,000 to secure the nomination for Congress has withdrawn from the race. Won't serve.

By the High School which has been in Covington. It is proposed to give Boone county an opportunity to attain a proficiency along educational lines at a cost not to exceed their board, which it is believed will be furnished them as cheap in Burlington as it can be attained at any other school in Kentucky. As for the principal, Prof. Dix has demonstrated his fitness for the position. He is an industrious, conscientious gentleman who will give the pupils his best efforts, consequently if they do not progress with their studies it will be no fault of his, and his earnest efforts in the school room will merit the hearty cooperation of the patrons on every proposition that involves the interest of the pupils. Without that no teacher can make a success, and with it Prof. Dix will bring the Boone County High School to the front as one of the best schools in the State. Teaching is the profession which he has chosen and upon his success along that line depends his future prosperity, consequently he, as well as the patrons, is interested in the school being a success which it is bound to be if patrons and pupils will show their appreciation by doing their part, and it is confidently believed they will, judging from the esteem in which the Professor is held in this community of which he has been a member the past year.

A supreme test for oil and gas in Robertson county is soon to begin. The Tribune Democrat says: "The machinery for drilling for oil and gas on the farm of Geo. Galbraith, on the North Fork, has arrived from Pennsylvania and is being placed in position for drilling. It required 16 horses to haul the outfit, which is said to be the largest and most powerful that has ever been brought to this section. We learn it is the intention of the oil and gas company in charge to sink wells 2,500 feet deep if necessary to secure a full flow of oil and gas. Those who have children will learn by looking up the law that they must send them to school. Those who are in office will learn by looking up the same that they must see that those children do go to school. See section 267 A. Kentucky Statutes, which reads as follows:

"Any parent, guardian or any other person having the custody or supervision of any child embraced within the provisions of this act, who shall fail to comply with the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars for the first offense; and for any subsequent offense, upon a conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not exceeding fifty days, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court."

Stalk Saved in the Silo. By placing corn in the silo the stalk as well as the grain is preserved for feeding purposes and the whole corn plant becomes available. About 40 per cent of the feeding value of the corn plant is in the stalk, leaves and husks and the other 60 per cent is in the grain. In handling corn as commonly practiced much of the 40 per cent is lost. When corn is cut for silage before lower leaves dry there is much waste. About twice this amount of dry matter can be stored in the form of silage as in the form of fodder. It has been determined that a cubic foot of hay in the mow contains about 4.3 pounds of dry matter, 3 cubic foot of space in a silo being worth more than twice an equal space in the mow.—E. A.

Don't Break Down. Severe strains on the vital organs, like strains on machinery, cause break-downs. You can't overtax stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels or nerves without serious danger to yourself. If you are weak or run-down, or under strain of any kind, get Electric Bitters, the matchless, tonic medicine. Mrs. J. E. Van de Sande, of Kirkland, Ill., writes: "That I did not break down, while enduring a most severe strain, for three months, is due wholly to Electric Bitters." Use them and enjoy health and strength. Satisfaction is the only guarantee. Get at Bentley's drug store, Erlanger.

Election Notice. The annual election of officers of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co. of Boone County, will be held at the company's office in Burlington on the first Monday in October, 1910. All the directors are requested to be present at this meeting. Policy holders should be present as they cannot now vote by proxy. Any member desiring his name put on the ballot for director must notify me by September 25th. MALCHUS SOUTHER, Secretary.

According to report Nicholas county tobacco growers seem more elated over the prospects for the 1910 crop than ever before. The heavily glutted market expresses the opinion that there is now no doubt but that half a crop will be realized since the falling of the cotton rains of the past week. They report that the tobacco is growing faster than ever was known in the same length of time, and that only a very killing frost can prevent half a yield.

The September crop report of the Department of Agriculture, showing the average condition of various crops as compiled by the Crop Reporting Board, says the average yield of corn in 1910 is 35.1 bushels per acre, compared with 33.1 bushels in 1909, 34.9 in 1908 and 33.1 in 1907.

He resided with his sister, Mrs. Jeff Roberts, of Bracht, until two weeks ago, when he went to the infirmary for treatment.

Kirby Adams, of Covington, son of the late Rev. Samuel Adams, of Walton, was united in marriage to Miss Louise Bristol, daughter of N. B. Bristol and wife, of Union at Union Baptist church, Wednesday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. Reed, of Erlanger, officiating.

Dr. and Mrs. Johnson and two children, who have been here on a visit the past month, have returned to their home at Rolla, Mo. While here Dr. Johnson purchased a span of fine horses for $240, and will drive them from St. Louis to Rolla, a distance of 200 miles.

Rev. and Mrs. Will B. Campbell left Monday for Harrodsburg, Mercer county, to attend the annual State Conference of the M. E. church, in session there this week. Our people will be delighted to have Rev. Campbell return here as pastor of the Walton church, but it may be that he will be promoted to a better field of work.

John E. Williams of near Verona, spent part of the past week at Louisville attending the State fair. His beautiful show mare Kate Hamilton won several premiums, and the crowd at the fair was completely carried away with the beautiful horse and gave it tremendous applause while in the ring. Chas. T. Best was also in attendance at the fair and had a number of exhibits.

S. W. Beverly, the popular station agent of the L. & N. Railway road Company at Walton, spent a week of vacation with friends at Louisville, Lexington and Paris, enjoying the rest very much. His place at Walton was most acceptably filled by Emory Wilson of Crittenden, who had charge of the telegraph department, and Clifford Rouse of Walton, who had charge of the general business.

Millinery Opening.
Mrs. Comelate Chambers-McKean, the modiste, who has millinery establishments in Cincinnati and Walton, will have a fall opening at her Walton store, near the postoffice, Saturday, October 1st, when Mrs. McKean will have on display the latest styles of millinery, tailor-made suits, evening gowns, etc., etc., which all are cordially invited to call and inspect. Mrs. McKean makes periodical visits to New York City and other eastern markets and secures advanced ideas in regard to all the latest styles, and she can please the most fastidious. This opening will be Saturday, October 1st, at the store near the postoffice, Walton, Ky.

Mrs. Comelate Chambers-McKean, Mrs. Dora Norman, wife of Pheno Norman, formerly of this place, died very suddenly at her home in Cincinnati last Wednesday from heart failure. The deceased was born near Crittenden county, and her maiden name was Anderson, and she was married to Mr. Norman at Walton about eighteen years ago. She was an excellent housewife and a very kind and sympathetic friend.

The sympathy of the community is tendered the bereaved family.

POULTRY NOTES.

Molting time is near at hand.

The yearling fowls are beginning to look ragged.

The growing stock should be showing their colors.

You can burn mites out with a torch; but take care, or there may be a fire.

Very hot weather! Have you given consideration to the question of shade?

It is a good thing at this season of the year to cull out the cockerels and save feed bills.

You think the hens are hiding their nests? Listen for their cackling and you can locate the spot.

Thrifty birds that have never had the least setback in their growth, make the best capons every time.

When you feed the chickens watch the young turkeys that they may not get too much corn. Too much will cause indigestion.

The greatest care will be needed to keep plenty of water in reach of the fowls during the hot weather. If you neglect this they are apt to suffer.

Turkeys eat more insects than they do grain; but you can not make your neighbor believe that if your turkeys take a notion to range in his wheat or oat-field.

Chops when fed exclusively to young chickens cause constipation. Better results will be had if chops are fed sparingly and a diet with more protein be given.

Bone meal furnishes lime to dist and is effective in helping to grind the food of fowls. Laying hens will be especially benefited if given bone meal occasionally.

Plant crops for fall and winter grazing. Fowls require this food for the best results and those who have it in abundance will likely get benefits of winter prices for eggs.

The chicken-house will require more attention in hot weather than in winter or fall. Lice, and mites breed very quickly in the summer and if allowed to get started are very hard to control. Clean and disinfect the premises often.

Save sorghum heads, kafir and milo for fowls. They will relish this diet in winter and your grain feed will be greatly saved if you have these crops. There is no not necessary as the fowls do their own threshing and needed exercise by so doing.

Keep the house as best as possible. The fowls are fighting the heat and mites and lice are under every tickle and every tickle.

Clothing Price Reduction

Every year clothing stores have their clearance sales and stock-reducing sales at reduced prices. And it is true that concessions are made. But the time has not yet arrived where any of these so-called sales can compete with us. This year round we give you the value and benefit of price. And why? Because:

First. We are manufacturers and buy our cloth by the bolt, not by the suit.

Second. We make every garment we sell at retail.

Third. We sell them to you at $9.95

Or just what the retailer must pay for his $15 and $18 suits.

Fourth. You get the benefit of our great buying power, the benefit of the middleman's profit and the benefit of the difference between the manufacturer and the retailer, because we sell direct to the trade.

Fifth. We guarantee every garment we sell, and keep it pressed and repaired free of charge for one year.

WHAT MORE CAN YOU ASK?

Come and inspect our suits and trousers. You will not obligate yourself to buy by doing so.

Not a drop of Alcohol

Doctors prescribe very little, if any, alcohol these days. They prefer strong tonics and alteratives. This is all in keeping with modern medical science. It explains why Ayer's Sarsaparilla is now made entirely free from alcohol. Ask your doctor. Follow his advice.

We publish our formulae. We have no hidden ingredients. We urge you to consult your doctor.

Unless there is daily action of the bowels, poisonous products are absorbed, causing headache, biliousness, nausea, dyspepsia. We wish you would ask your doctor about correcting your constipation by taking laxative doses of Ayer's Pills.

The tobacco growers of Kentucky would better get a move on and pool the 1910 crop of tobacco and put a stop to the business of the 1909 crop being dumped on the market. If there is no pool of the 1910 crop, which will probably never be a large part of the 1909 crop.

The tobacco pool is a long time in the making and it will be a long time before the 1910 crop is put on the market. The tobacco pool is a long time in the making and it will be a long time before the 1910 crop is put on the market.

LOUISVILLE JUSTICE O'HARA

Makes Working Talk On

Burley Pool.

Justice E. G. O'Hara of the Kentucky court of appeals took "The Tobacco Situation" as the subject for a stirring address before the Men's Club of the Crescent Hill Presbyterian church in Louisville. The serious light in which he regards the organization of growers is shown in the declaration, "If the farmers are not prosperous, there is not a town in Kentucky except Louisville that could stay on the map longer than it would take the railroads to move the citizens away."

"Kentucky's Rich Monopoly," said Judge O'Hara, "and people are not going to give it to us. We have been inviting foreign capital ever since I have been big enough to read the newspapers, but it either has not received the invitation or has been busy elsewhere. Kentucky produces 75 per cent of the burley tobacco of the world, and more tobacco of all kinds than any other territory. Tobacco grown elsewhere is no more Kentucky tobacco than blue grass is Kentucky bluegrass. Tobacco grown in Missouri, however, can be raised wherever a man can, but there is no tobacco like the one produced in Kentucky. So there is something in this domain, chosen by our forefathers for the tobacco plant, that the whole west to choose from, is conducive to the production of tobacco. Practically we have a monopoly of its production."

"Efficiency of Organization," said Judge O'Hara, "is the muddiest stream in the Ohio river that makes it natural for people living north of it to be more successful. And there is no reason why Indiana and Illinois and Ohio should grow richer every year while Kentucky barely holds her own, unless it is because they are given a protection that Kentucky is not."

"Judge O'Hara declared that he felt it was permissible for any man interested in establishing Kentucky where she was 50 years ago among her sister states to concern himself with the present movement of organization which has the approval of the legislature, the press, the courts and the constitution, and is similar to organizations which were approved by the predecessor of the present president of the United States."

THE FINAL ANALYSIS.

(Sheila Sentinal.)

If the tobacco grower does not today pool his product there is but one reason for it. It can be described in a single word. It is an ugly one, and one that we hate to utter or to give place to in our minds. Yet it is the only one that will stand the test of a diagnosis. That word is selfishness.

Now that we have said it out, let there be none to believe that the Sentinal is any the less sincere in its friendship to the tobacco grower. It is by reason of our intense love for the farmer and his interest in which are a part of our own, that we have forced ourselves to this extreme statement, in the hope that the evil may be corrected and cured while there is time.

To repeat again, let the days for profitless dissension of the good things done by the pool be ended. The proof is too abundant and patent for argument.

The question, and the only one, that is up to the farmer today is, will you pool your crop? If you insist on argument and angry discussion, let us add, tell your troubles to the marines, we'll none of them.

Pool, pool, pool your crop. The crop of 1910. That's all.

A WARNING TO "INDEPENDENTS."

(Cynthiana Log Cabin.)

The issues are made up and the intelligent farmer can not fail to realize that he is in the most serious position he has ever occupied. He can pool his crop and thereby help insure a good market for years to come, or he can sell out to the first and help kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

There are thousands of farmers who think they can sell out and not affect the general result—farmers who are willing to take the chances on some one else's hapings up the market.

It remains to be seen whether the majority of farmers will do their duty to themselves and their neighbors, or will hold out and let the pool go to ruin.

We have no words of abuse for the independent, and we believe we have never applied the word "dumb" to the outsider. But we want to warn these independents that they are doing all in their power to ruin the tobacco market for years to come and that they will succeed in doing it unless they quickly join the pool.

Each independent can do more than any old pooler because every time an independent joins he is joined by four or five old poolers who are waiting on him.

We want to see the very poorest to join the pool, and we want to see the very best to join the pool, and we want to see the very best to join the pool.

CRIMINALS OUT IN THE FIELD

Several persons were arrested last night by the Lexington police. About a dozen of the Lexington Police were here to show some of the prisoners who were not given in the case. Almost to a man they were arrested. The first was John Deputy, a man who was arrested last night. The case was put off and the case will come up again at an early date.

Thursday of last week a man giving his name as C. B. Newton, and claiming to be from College Hill, Ohio, was arrested here with a load of 30 chickens. He was driving along the Lexington Pike when arrested. He was taken to the Lexington police station, having excited attention. Asked to give an account of himself, he declared that he was from College Hill, a suburb of Cincinnati. The County Judge called up various parties at College Hill, but failed to find any one who knew him. He was held until Tuesday of this week. He was called up for examining trial. In the meantime some of the chickens had been identified as stolen property. The man pleaded guilty and was given a jail sentence of 30 days. There was a suspicion that the horse he was driving was also stolen. No proof to this effect could be secured.

Two handsome pianos which have been at the depot at this place for the past several weeks, led to the arrest of B. V. Hunt and a fine of $25.00 and costs being assessed against him Wednesday. Hunt alleges that he represents a piano house in Buffalo, N. Y. He claimed that the pianos were shipped here through error and when he arrived in town last Tuesday he made an effort to dispose of the pianos. They were handsome instruments and were said to be worth $500 each. There is a bill of lading at local banks calling for the payment of $200 on the music boxes. Hunt tried to sell the pianos for less than the bill of lading amounted to, but when local parties offered to buy them he backed out. County Attorney Adams had the man arrested on a charge of trying to sell pianos and he was released, and costs. Wednesday evening Hunt left town. The pianos are still here and there may be another chapter to this story.

Stahl-Ambrose Marriage.
Sunday Sept. 14th, at 1:30 p. m., Mr. John A. Stahl and Miss Oia Ambrose were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Ambrose, of near South Fork. The beautiful and impressive ceremony uniting these young hearts and lives was performed by Rev. A. S. Allphin, pastor of South Fork Christian church, of which the contracting parties were members. Mr. Stahl being an efficient Superintendent of the Bible school and his wife one of the Bible school teachers, both being earnest workers in the cause they represent. Mr. Robert Harris and Miss Pearl Ambrose, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid and the groom, which was beautifully decorated with plants and flowers for the occasion. The prettiest young bride was most tastefully attired in a suit of blue silk and the groom neatly attired in the conventional suit of black. After the reading of the vows and the exchange of the immediate family and a few guests, who were enjoying the hospitality of the home, Mr. and Mrs. Stahl left by boat for Cincinnati to spend several days. The best wishes of a host of friends is extended to the young couple who are quite popular with a large circle of friends.

The Courage of Captain Plum

JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

Illustrations by Magnus G. Kettner

(Copyright 1909 by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

SYNOPSIS.

Captain Plum, a man of the sloop "Typhoon," had been secretly on the island, Lake Michigan, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and counselor of the Mormons, who has been spying on him, suddenly confronts him and tells him he is expected. Plum insists he has got the wrong end of the stick. Price ignores his protestations and bargains for the ammunition on board the sloop. His mind is by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. He agrees to show Plum the Mormon town, St. James. Plum sees the frightened face of a young woman in the darkness near the door of black. It develops that Plum's visit to Beaver Island is to demand redemption from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously by men whom he suspected of being Mormons. Burke, his mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to command St. James if the captain does not return within a certain time. Price takes Plum secretly in the darkness to the king's house, and through a window he sees Strang and his seven wives, among whom is the lady of the lake, who Price says is the seventh wife. Price's actions lead Plum to believe that he is jealous of Strang. Plum calls at the king's office, where a young woman warns him the king is in danger, and urges him to return to his ship. He refuses. Strang receives Plum cordially, professes great indignation when he hears of the king's grievance and promises to investigate and punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning that his life is in danger.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.

They had passed in a semicircle beyond the temple and now approached a squat building constructed of logs, which Obadiah had pointed out as the jail. A glance satisfied Nathaniel that it was so situated that an admirable view of the proceedings could be obtained from the rear of the structure in which Strang had his office. Several scores of people had already assembled about the prison and stood chatting with that tense interest and anticipation with which the mob always awaits public infliction of the law's penalties. A third of them were women. An Nathaniel had previously noted, the feminine part of the Mormon population wore their hair either in braids down their backs or in thick curls flowing over their shoulders and with the exception of three or four were attired in skirts that just concealed their knees. Obadiah halted his companion close to a group of half a dozen of these women and nudged him slyly.

"Pretty sight, eh, Nat?" he chuckled. "Ah, the king has a wonderful eye for beauty, Nat—wonderful eye! He orders that no skirt shall fall below the knees, knee, Ho, ho, if he dared, if he quite dared, Nat!"

He nudged Nathaniel again with such enthusiasm that the latter jumped as though a knife had been thrust between his ribs.

"By George, I admire his taste!" he laughed. The women caught him staring at them, and one, who was the youngest and prettiest of the lot, smiled invitingly.

"Tush—the rebel!" snapped Obadiah, catching the look. "That's her child playing just beyond."

The young woman tossed her head and her white teeth gleamed in a laugh, as though she had overheard the old counselor's words.

"See her twist her hair," he started venomously as the young woman, still boldly eyeing Nathaniel, played with the luxuriant curls that glittered in the sun upon her breast. "Extra! Winton is so fond of her that he will take no other wife. Ugh, Strang is a fool!"

Nathaniel turned away from the smiling eyes with a shrug.

"Why?"

"To tell our women that it helps to save their souls to wear short skirts and let their hair hang down. For every soul of a woman that it saves it sends two men on the road to hell!"

So intense was the old man's displeasure and so ludicrous the twisting contortions of his face that Nathaniel could hardly restrain himself from bursting into a roar of laughter. Obadiah perceived his inclination and with an angry bob of his head led the way through to the inner edge of the waiting-circle of men. Within this circle, in a small open space, was a short post with straps attached to an arm nailed across it, and leaning upon this post in an attitude of one who possesses a most distinguished office was a young man with a three-toothed whip in his hand. An ominous silence pervaded the circle, with the exception of the hushed whispering of a number of women who had forced themselves into the circle of spectators, bent upon witnessing the sight of the blond as well as hearing the sound of lashes. Nathaniel noticed that most of the women hung in frightened curiosity beyond the men.

Then he nudged Nathaniel with the back of his hand and nudged him of the slave houses," explained Obadiah in a whisper.

Nathaniel gave a start of horror.

"Slave houses!" he breathed.

The counselor grinned and twisted his hands in enjoyment of his companion's surprise.

"We have the finest pack of bloodhounds north of Louisiana," he continued, so low that only Nathaniel could hear. "See! Isn't the earth worn smooth and hard about that post?"

Nathaniel looked and his blood grew hot.

"I have seen such things in the south," he said. "But not—for white men!"

The counselor caught him by the arm.

"They are coming!"

In the direction of the jail the crowd was separating. Men crushed back on each side, forming a narrow aisle, even the whispering of the women ceased. A moment later three men appeared in the opening between the spectators. One of these, who walked between the other two, was stripped to the waist. About each of his naked wrists was tied a leather thong and these thongs were held by the man's guards. The prisoner's face was livid; his hands were red with blood that dripped from his lacerated wrists; his eyes glared malignantly and his heaving chest showed that he had not been brought from the log prison without a struggle.

"Ah, it's Willie first!" breathed the counselor. "It's he who said his wife should not wear short skirts."

At the edge of the circle the prisoner hesitated and the muscles in his arms and chest grew rigid. Those of the crowd nearest to him drew back. Then a sudden change swept over the man's features and he walked quickly to the stake and knelt before it. The thongs about his wrists were tied to the straps of the cross-piece and the whipper took his position. As the first lash fell, a cry burst from the lips of the victim. When the whip descended again he was silent. A curious sensation of sickness crept over Nathaniel as he saw the red gashes thicken on the white flesh.

She Flung Herself in Front of MacDougal.

Five times—six times—seven times the whip rose and fell and he could see the blood starting. In horror he turned his eyes away. Behind him a man grinned at the whiteness of his face and the involuntary trembling of his lips. Again and again he heard the lash fall upon the naked back. From near him there came a sobbing wail of a woman. A subdued movement, a sound as of murmuring wordless voices swept through the throng. A steady glitter filled the eyes of the man who had laughed at him, and he turned again to the stake. The man's back was dripping with blood. Great red seams lay upon his shoulders and a single lash had cut his bowed neck. Another stroke, more fierce than the others, and MacDougal turned away from the figure at the post, breathing hard. The guards undressed the victim's wrist-thongs and the man staggered to his feet. As he awayed down through the path that opened for him his crimson back shone in the sun.

"Great God!" gasped Nathaniel.

He turned to Obadiah and was startled by the appearance of the old man. The counselor's face was ghastly. His mouth twitched and his body trembled. Nathaniel took his arm sympathetically.

"Hadin't we better go, dad?" he whispered.

"No—no—no—not yet, Nat. It's—It's the Nell now and I must see how the boy stands it!"

It was a short time before the guards returned. This time their prisoner walked free and erect. The thongs dangled from his wrists and he was a pace ahead of the two men who accompanied him. He was a young man. Nathaniel judged his age at twenty-five. He was a striking contrast to the man who had suffered first at the post. His face instead of betraying the former's pallor was flushed with excitement; his head was held high; not a sign of fear or hesitation shone in his eyes. As he glanced quickly around the circle of faces the flush grew deeper in his cheeks. He nodded and smiled at MacDougal and in that nod and smile there was a meaning that sent a shiver to the whipmaster's heart. Then his eyes fell upon Obadiah and Nathaniel. He saw the counselor's hand resting upon the young captain's arm and a flash of understanding passed over his face. For an instant the eyes of the two young men met. The man at the post took half a step forward. His lips moved as if he was on the point of speaking, the defiant smile went out of his face, the flush faded in his cheeks. Then he turned quickly and held out his hands to the guards.

As the young man knelt before the post Nathaniel heard a smothered sob at his side which he knew came from Obadiah.

"Come, dad," he said slyly. "I can't stand this. Let's get away!"

He shoved the counselor back. The lash whistled through the air behind him. As it fell there came a piercing cry. It was a woman's voice, and with a snarl like that of a tormented animal the old man struck down Nathaniel's arm and claved his way back to the edge of the line. On the opposite side there was a surging in the crowd and as MacDougal raised his whip a woman burst through.

"My God!"

He left the rest of the words unspoken. His veins leaped with fire. A single sweep of his powerful arms and he had forced himself through the innermost line of spectators. Within a dozen feet of him stood Strang's wife, her beautiful hair disheveled, her face deadly white, her bosom heaving as if she had been running. In a moment her eyes had taken in the situation—the man at the stake, the a sobbing, breathless cry, she flung herself in front of MacDougal and threw her arms around the kneeling man, her hair covering him in a gleaming veil. For an instant her eyes were raised to Nathaniel and he saw in them that same agonized appeal that had called to him through the king's window. The striking muscles of his arms tightened like steel. One of the guards sprang forward and caught the girl roughly by the arm and attempted to drag her away. In his excitement he pulled her head back and her hair trailed in the dirt. The sight was maddening. From Nathaniel's throat there came a fierce cry and in a single leap he had cleared the distance to the guard and had driven his fist against the officer's head with the sickening force of a sledge hammer. The man fell without a groan. In another flash he had drawn his knife and severed the thongs that held the man at the stake. For a moment his face was very near the girl's and he saw her lips form the glad cry which he did not wait to hear.

He turned like an enraged beast toward the circle of dumbfounded spectators and launched himself at the second guard. From behind him there sounded a shout and he caught the shoulders of the counselors as the man who had been at the stake rushed to his side. Together they tore through the narrow rim of the crowd, striking at the faces which appeared before them, their terrific blows driving men right and left.

"This way, Nell!" shouted Nathaniel.

They raced up the slope that led from the town to the forest. Even the king's officer, palsied by the suddenness of the attack, had not followed. From a screened window in the king's building two men had witnessed the exciting scene near the jail. One of them was Strang. The other was Arbor Croche. At another window a few feet away, hidden from their eyes by a high desk and masses of papers and books, Winsome Croche was crumpled up on the floor hardly daring to breathe through fear of betraying her presence. From these windows they had seen the girl run from behind the jail; they had watched her struggle through the line of spectators, saw Nathaniel leap forward—saw the quick blow, the gleaming knife, and the escape. So suddenly had it all occurred that not a sound escaped the two astonished men. But as Nathaniel and Nell burst through the crowd and sped toward the forest Strang's great voice boomed forth like the rumble of a gun.

"Arbor Croche, overtake those men and kill them!"

With a wild curse the chief of sheriffs dashed down the stairway, and as he heard him go the terror of Winsome's heart seemed to turn her blood cold. She knew what that command meant. She knew that her father would obey it. As the daughter of the chief of sheriffs more than one burning secret was hidden in her breast, more than one of those frightful dangers that had prickled at the soul of her mother when they had murdered her. And the chief of them all was this: That to Arbor Croche the words of Strang were the words of God and that if the prophet said kill, he would kill. For a full minute she crouched in her concealment, stunned by the horror that had so quickly taken the place of the joy with which she had witnessed the escape. She heard Strang leave the window, heard his heavy steps in the outer room, heard the door close, and knew that he, too, was gone. She sprang to her feet and ran to the window at which the two men had stood. The chief of sheriffs was already at the jail. The crowd had begun to disperse. Men were swarming like ants up the long slope reaching to the forest. Three or four of the leaders were running and she knew that they were hot in pursuit of the fugitives. Others were following more slowly and among these she saw that there were women. As she looked there came a sound from the stair. She recognized the step. She recognized the voice that called her name a moment later and with a despairing cry she turned with outstretched arms to greet the girl for whom Nathaniel had interrupted the king's whipping.

DAME NATURE HINTS When the Food is Not Suficed.

When Nature gives her signal that something is wrong it is generally with the food. The old dame is always faithful and one should act at once.

To put off the change is to risk that which may be irreparable. An Arizona man says:

"For years I could not safely eat any breakfast. I tried various kinds of breakfast food, but they were all soft, starchy, messy which gave me distressing headaches. I drank strong coffee, too, which appeared to benefit me at the time, but added to the headaches afterwards. Toast and coffee were no better, for I found the toast very constipating."

"A friend persuaded me to quit the old coffee and the starchy breakfast foods, and use Postum and Grape-Nuts instead. I shall never regret taking his advice. I began using them three months ago."

"The change they have worked in me is wonderful. I now have no more of the distressing sensations in my stomach after eating, and I never have headaches. I have gained 15 pounds in weight and feel better in every way."

"Grape-Nuts make a delicious as well as a nutritious dish, and I find that Postum is easily digested and never produces dyspepsia symptoms."

"There's a Reason."

BEGINNING OF THE IRON AGE

Excellent Reason for Believing It Originated in Central Europe—Its Use in China.

The iron age is commonly believed to have begun in Africa and Asia. The latest investigations prove that it was not worked in Egypt until the ninth century before the Christian era; or in Libya until 450 B. C.; that the Semites adopted its use still later, and that it has been known in Uganda only with the last five or six centuries. In China iron is said to have been used 400 B. C. Bronze weapons were found in China until 100 A. D., and in Japan until 700 A. D.

According to a Mr. Ridgeway, who has investigated this subject, the metallurgy of iron must have originated in central Europe, especially in Noricum, which approximately represented modern Austria and Bavaria. Only at Hallstatt and in Bosnia and Transylvania, from which countries the Achaeans and Dorians are supposed to have migrated to Greece, are found evidences of a gradual introduction of iron, at first as an ornament applied to the bronze, which it ultimately displaced. Everywhere else iron was introduced suddenly, a fact which implies a foreign origin.

Metallurgical iron was known in Egypt in remote antiquity, but no doubt it was worked as flint was worked by cutting or chipping, and was not smelted. In other words, it was the metallurgy, not the knowledge of iron, that originated in central Europe.

FINANCES IN THE NURSERY

Real Wisdom in Making Children Realize the Actual Value of Their Money.

"I do not see why a parent should not say to a girl: 'Here is so much a year; you have to pay your school bills, your dress, your laundry, your traveling expenses, and the cost of your games and your sweets out of it.' This was the startling suggestion advanced by a public speaker in a lecture on 'Woman and Her Money,' given to a large gathering of women recently in London.

In his capacity as a lawyer, the speaker has seen much misery and unhappiness among the daughters of the rich, who, through their ignorance of the value of money, have been responsible, and in his opinion many disasters could be avoided if women were more wisely educated in the handling and investing of money. The ideal father and mother give their children an allowance, he went on to say, 'even if it is only a penny a week. This allowance should be increased as time goes on, and a girl should gradually be allowed to pay all her own bills and expenses.'

The Duration of Dreams.
Something regarding the duration of dreams can be gathered from this experience of a man who, on sitting down for a dental operation, took a nap and dreamed. He saw himself finish his work, go to the club, leave for the station, run for the train and miss it. He returned to his club and reclined on a sofa in the library. There he passed a miserable, restless night, getting gradually colder and colder as the fire died down, and with a pain gradually growing about his head and face from the hardness of his couch. Five o'clock in the morning came, the steward roused him to say that the club must be closed. The sleeper got up feeling very stiff, and found that the steward was his dentist, and that the night's adventures had lasted exactly 42 seconds.

Didn't Want to Go Too Far.
Joseph Jefferson had a favorite story concerning a small boy whose cherished bulldog got into frequent fights. After one such encounter troubled Jimmy sought the aid of the late family physician.

"Why, yes, I can fix your dog up," said this gentleman, kindly, "but I thought your family had accepted Christian Science. Why don't you try one of your own healers? Don't you think they could cure him?"

"Yes, sir," hesitated the lad, nervously stepping from one foot to another. "We have, an' they could, an' I would only—I'm afraid they'll take all the fight out of him, that's all."

A Jam Thief in Court.
Little Willie, nine years old, was noticed by his stepmother to pay many quiet visits to his bedroom. She followed and found him eating jam out of a jar. She beat him until he told her he had stolen it, so she took him and the jam to a nearby shop. Willie was charged at Oldstreet with stealing the jam, but the magistrate said it was perfectly ridiculous to bring such a little boy when his father, if not his stepmother, could deal with the matter himself. The boy was discharged.—New York Press.

Petroleum in Venezuela.
There are five known petroleum deposits in Venezuela. One of the petroleum, covering a considerable territory, are found in the district of Maracaibo, the River Limon asphalt mine. Oil has been located at Bella Vista, near the city of Maracaibo, and at Maracaibo, near the city of Maracaibo.

FARM NOTES.

Any farmer can make his farm a model with time, planning and work.

Getting along with anything that will do is not making the most of conditions.

With corn, as with animals, do not forever be mixing and crossing breeds.

By fertilization, cultivation and selection, try to improve the breed, and seed corn to soil.

It is best to mow corn ground in the winter and plow or disc it under in the spring.

Every beekeeper needs one or more books on bee culture, dealing with the keeping of bees.

Farmers in general now are building in a more substantial way. The use of concrete is responsible for a part of it.

New corn as part ration is good for horses doing fall work, and it is excellent for fattening beef cattle.

Corn should not be planted on sod which was broken up this spring for the first time until late in the season.

The barn set on a concrete foundation looks substantial, and it is so, and will last longer than the one set on wooden posts or blocks.

As soon as the corn plants are tall enough so the driver can see the rows, go into the field with a disc cultivator and disc the ground twice.

On a hard and shallow soil white clover does not ordinarily last more than two years, but on the richer and moister lands it will grow for many years without reseeding.

Many farmers are so intent on making money for the money's sake that they take no thought of the great possibilities of perfect living in the country.

Alfalfa is so unlike any other forage crop that it requires method of curing altogether different from that used in curing clover, timothy, or any other meadow grasses.

A prolific queen bee will during her life lay 1,500,000 eggs, each one-fourteenth of an inch long. Put together they would make a chain 14 miles long.

Bees are worth all the trouble they require to fertilize the stigmas of the flowers in your orchard. The yield of honey is clear profit.

The great farm cry now, is not more land, but more fertile land. And the only solution to successful future farming is in the increased fertility of the soil. It must be made more fertile; future human food supply depends upon it.

Those who have been dairymen long will recognize the wisdom of the following suggestions by a practical dairyman. In the eastern states where dairying is more prevalent than it is in the central west, one very seldom finds a silo on which there is not a sign. This is due to the fact that the experience of practical dairymen as well as the experiments carried on by the agricultural states have conclusively that milk and butter-fat can be produced more profitably where a portion of the ration consists of properly made corn silage than on any other ration that can be produced.

The increasing value of farm lands in the corn belt indicates that dairy farming will be much more prevalent in the future than it has in the past. As this condition gradually comes about silos and alfalfa fields are among the most profitable investments a farmer can make. Given good cows, good alfalfa fields—small but well cared for—and milk and butter-fat can be produced more largely and with greater profit than by any other method.

No combination of factors is more conducive to prosperity, wealth, health and good health than are well bred dairy cattle, capacious silos and productive alfalfa fields.

The onion belongs to the lily family and contains precious elements of health and nourishment, especially to nerves and blood. The turnip also has medicinal and food value, though it is not so nourishing, containing, like cabbage, over 80 per cent of water. The yellow turnip is considered a mild purgative. The unpopular carrot is almost miraculous as a blood purifier, and French women consider it as important as any cosmetic. It has also unclaimed possibilities in preparing for the things by other names sometimes helps matters, or making fashionable by favor of the famous. In Ceylon the term okra "lady's fingers," the vegetable marrow of Europe is virtually the same as our summer squash, but is used in a very different way. Mr. Luther Burbank has improved the "pie plant," and his new crimson winter burbank is a wonderful thing. In Ceylon the term okra "lady's fingers," the vegetable marrow of Europe is virtually the same as our summer squash, but is used in a very different way.

The announcement of Charles W. Nagel, of Newport, as a Republican candidate for Congress from the Sixth Congressional District, will be found in this issue. Mr. Nagel has resided all of his life in Campbell county and his useful identification with all of the best interests of that county has made him very popular with his people, and he has been of great help to the people because of his fitness for the position. Mr. Nagel is the present Senator from Campbell county, and the general opinion has been expressed by those on the ground that he was one of the best Senators in Kentucky's last legislative body. Mr. Nagel is the embodiment of good citizenship, and his personal characteristics are very attractive and praiseworthy. He has been at the head of the building association interests in Newport, and his personal activity in providing means by which the industrial people of Campbell county could easily acquire comfortable homes and which has made Newport a wealthy, populous city, is a recommendation alone of the public spirited disposition of Mr. Nagel. He is in full harmony with every progressive idea, and his moral character is without blemish. Mr. Nagel is a man of brilliant attainments, and his identification with the struggling mass of people and their interests would make him a valuable member in Congress. He is a Republican but not a bitter partisan and all of the people in the district would be most careful to elect him as their representative. The election takes place Tuesday, November 8th, and he would appreciate your vote and support.—Warsaw Independent.

Frankfort.—After spending twenty years in the penitentiary, and brought back to jail, from which place he escaped while serving a sentence for horse stealing, Bert A. Williams, formerly of Pike county, now can look his neighbors in the face without apprehension or shame, for he has been pardoned. The pardon was issued to him late this afternoon by Gov. Willson. The Governor said King had earned the pardon for twenty years of straight living. In what State King now lives was not given out by the Governor, as the reformer convicted is now holding a position of trust and it was believed that he had been pardoned. It was said that he formerly was a convict.

"HOODLER BOY"

While Visiting Relatives In Old Boone Makes a Circle of the Scenes of Former Days.

Meeting Old Friends, And Greatly Surprised at The Many Improvements and Changes.

To the Editor of the Recorder: In company with Jack Conner, the Union Hotel, made a pleasant visit to Walton recently. The town has certainly made some long strides toward city proportions and judging from all appearances promises to be much larger some day.

Walton of today and 34 years ago are as different as night and day. The differences, to say the most of it, is very much in favor of the modern Walton. Splendid homes, commodious apartments, stores, oiled streets, concrete sidewalks, fine churches and school buildings, with a citizenship to match.

After looking around town for a while Jack suggested that we should go to the best of the most genial and best fed man in town, so we made up our minds he ought to be mayor if he wasn't. At any rate, Joe acting as mayor, protem gave us the keys to the city with instructions to see everything in town. The keys were bright and would unlock most any old town, but no sooner had we started in to see things along came our old friend, Frank Reas, who took them away from us and declared he would do the showing act himself. Frank is a. k. a. We saw that the town has banks, hardware shops, boot blacks, box and butcher shops.

Col. Wallace Garrison and Capt. Allen seemed perfectly at home in Walton recently. To say they are both making good citizens. Capt. Allen did not seem half so nervous and pale as he did one April morning 34 years ago at Hamilton, when he cut about two ounces of meat out of the writer's left hand and gave Dr. William Reas, now prominent Louisville citizen, his first job of surgery.

At the barber shop Dr. Menzies and the tonsorial artist introduced each to the other, and to us all—very much to the amusement of everybody present. Getting shaved makes anybody hungry and very naturally we began to inquire about the best place to eat. The consensus of opinion was that Mrs. Maggie Thomas, of the Phoenix Hotel, stood first as a caterer and could prepare a supper to please any body. Mrs. Thomas spent several years of her life in Union where she is well and favorably known. The supper was perfect and we were pleased to the extent that Jack ate so much that he was obliged for two hours after supper the opera house was taken in and so were we, because they had no moving pictures. The manager apologized by showing a "Panorama of Union." In the foreground was Senator Platt, painting signs; Tom Burkitt moving a house; "Bubba" running a rig in front of Ben Norman's store; Prof. Vossell picking up barrels of pears off of two trees; Dr. Ben for painting his front fence and trying to decide how many coats he can love painting and at the same time love his country and himself. Harry Tanner painting the creamery; Mr. Jones of Aurora, painting the new school house; Mr. Warren gratefully thanking the boys for coming in and cutting his tobacco; James Aylor breaking through Tom Judge's bridge with his engine; J. Lynn Huey fully recovered from a runaway accident; Jas. A Huey and Willie Smith preparing to build barns and George Rouse cutting out the lumber; Prof. Cundiff of Somerset, sizing up the situation prior to opening up of school.

After the show we left or home via Richwood, where Col. Jackson was found holding the fort and bid us a kind welcome. The Colonel has no equal as an entertainer unless uncle Jerry Carpenter happens around, then he has to go way back, &c. At Argoswa the lights were peace prevailed and the mayor, Daniel Dobbins, had gone to bed, which was disappointing for the boys, but ever having a better mayor, Union was going some, too, for the Odd-Fellows were enjoying a chicken soup; Geo. Stevenson was telling about 10 fine fish he caught from Gunpowder; Delehaunty, Costa, Farrell, & Co., glad their 40 acres of tobacco was cut and housed.

UNION BLADE.

M. C. Rankin says there is not any sort of doubt about him defeating Congressman J. Campbell Cantrell in the Seventh district. "It's this way," he confidently stated Mr. Rankin to a friend the other day. "I have never been defeated for an office in my life, never failed to make a majority single year since I was old enough to plant one, and never bought a pound of meat since I was born. I was elected Commissioner of Agriculture and you simply can't beat a man with a record like that, my boy. Nope, there's nothing to it, you can't beat him."

Human Ostriches Dismantled By Negroes.

(St. Joe, Mo., News-Press.) The human ostriches of circuses and dime museums must give way to real ostriches, a thirty-year-old negress, in whose stomach was found a collection of 1,446 articles weighing five pounds, during an examination following her death at the state hospital for the insane. The woman with the unusual appetite did not die a victim to her habit. Her death was due to kidney trouble, and the odd stomach contents, some of which she swallowed several years ago, seemingly never were a cause of serious disturbance.

Following is a complete list of the articles found in the woman's stomach when a post mortem examination was made following her death:

453 nails of different sizes, 19 screws, assorted sizes, 8 bolts, 7 broken coat hooks, 2 1/2 inches, 3 string of beads, four feet in length, 70 loose beads, 80 small stones and pieces of glass, 4 pieces of metal, 3 oz. 200 gr. 7 prune seeds, 18 hooks and eyes, 148 small seeds, 2 teaspoon handles, 1 nail file, 3 inches long, 3 pieces of steel, 3 1/2 inches long each, 2 thumbtacks, 2 salt shaker tops, 10 taps for 3 1/4 inch bolts, 63 buttons, 108 small pieces of wood, 115 hair pins, 52 carpet tacks, 136 common pins, 16 whitened pins, 1 1/4 to 2 1/4 inches long, 37 needles. Grand total, 1,446 pieces.

It was at the post mortem examination that the most remarkable collection was had by the asylum physicians. None of the doctors of course knew all the woman possessed an appetite for nails, coat hooks, beads, safety-pins and automobile tags until the stomach was opened and the foreign articles were found.

Dr. A. H. Vandiver, of the hospital staff, had the collection photographed. Arranged on a board, a yard square, all the articles will be displayed at the institution. The physician agrees that almost anyone would be inclined to doubt the authenticity of the exhibition, but he had four witnesses when the post mortem was performed, Dr. A. B. McGlothlin, Union Hotel, E. R. Sideladen and several others.

"We never knew that the woman had a mania of this sort," said Dr. Vandiver. "In fact, she helped to clean some of the wards, and often brought to the attendants pins and nails she had picked up off the floors, so that she didn't eat all the hardware she came across."

One of the unusual tidbits that the Roper woman swallowed was a small handle of a Rambler automobile. It was the word "Rambler" stamped in script, from heavy brass, three inches long and half-inch high. Five spoon handles doubtless were harder to swallow than anything else that the demented woman accumulated. The asylum nurses take old spoons, break off the bowl, and bend the handle together into a makeshift key ring, which can be slipped onto a key. Five of these found their way into the repository of all the other junk. A heel plate was another delicacy that appealed to the gourmand.

Corn vs. Wheat.

Because of the comparatively large profit in the corn crop and the certainty of some return, we have for several years past an excess in the corn acreage which has resulted in a general reduction in yield and injury to the ground by continuous cropping. The excess in corn acreage can also be accounted for in the fact that the depreciation of the chain bag and the heavy fly a few years ago caused our farmers to lose interest in the wheat crop. Also very few men have stopped to figure the cost of production of the two crops and the returns from each.

From many figures the cost of producing an acre of corn is approximately $12 and wheat $8 per acre. The average production of wheat in this State for the last five years has been 30 bushels per acre and corn 30.7 bushels per acre. The average price of wheat during the same period has been 80 cents and corn 47 cents per bushel. At these prices the value of an acre of wheat has been $10.92 and an acre of corn $14.93 which leaves a profit when the cost of production is taken out of $2.96 per acre for wheat, and $2.47 for corn, showing that as a money crop the wheat growers of this State have really made more money than those growing corn. The profit in either case is little enough it is true, and should be greatly increased by growing rotation crops.

At the Missouri Station, the two methods of cropping have been thoroughly compared and in the past twenty years those plots growing corn continuously have hardly paid expenses while those growing corn in rotation with other crops produced 80.3 per cent more than the continuous cropping ones. Wheat yields increased 16 per cent during the same time due to rotation. Journal of Agriculture.

O. P. Phipps and William Kirk spent a day or two last week with an Ohio man who was hunting for cowboys to buy.

There have been several night corn-cuttings in this neighborhood during the past week. The bright nights are fine for such work.

WHAT THE NATION-WIDE REVOLT MEANS.

An examination of the uprising in the several States will show that instead of it being directed against Protection to American labor over cheap labor abroad, the whole trouble is lack of Protection against crooked and greedy corporations, traitorous officials, and political bosses--at home.

The continued rule of Big Bosses caused Republican Ohio to turn to the Democrats; and the incessant and insolent rule of a dozen Bosses caused Democratic Kentucky to turn to the Republicans.

To establish the people's will over bosses and chronic office-grabbers forced Republican Indiana to turn Democratic; and to annihilate Gov. Patterson and his infamous "Buckeye" chair, and walloping the crooked corporations made it necessary for Democratic Missouri to turn to the Republicans, which elevated the brave Hadley to the Governorship and established the rule of the people.

Cleaning up the Nation's great insurance companies immortalized Charles E. Hughes and made him the people's Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Furying Cannonism, Aldrichism and Bossism in Congress, and establishing the rule of the people's representatives there--has made national heroes of Democrats and Republicans working together.

Standing true even in the face of sacrificing their position to conserve the Nation's resources for the people instead of for the rich and greedy Guggenheims, has made national leaders of Gifford P. notch and James R. Garfield.

Then there stand Bryan and Roosevelt--the Nation's yea, the world's, two most eminent reformers and fighters for the rule of the people over the present rule of big business and Bosses.

All this shows the cause of our National upheaval, and the cause of the Nation's love for the brave named leaders. Democratic States are turning Republican; Republican States are turning Democratic; and Democrats are turning independent, insurgent, progressive, or whatever you wish to call them, yet many sleepy-eyed folks do not see that the present uprising, the fiercest struggle since the Civil War, is a nation-wide revolt of the people, irrespective of parties, for Public Ownership of Public Government.

Big Business and Bosses have got to get out of politics, and the people's public servants have got to know the people's will and heed it.

Direct legislation will do this. It does not abandon representative government; instead it compels our representatives to represent us. This plan stands as the great remedy for the Declaration of Independence and the other in the Constitution. While the arch-foes are the Direct Primary, the Initiative, Referendum, the Recall, and the Corrupt Practices acts.

Hickman.--The sudden longing of the Mississippi River for Missouri soil has spread consternation among the people interested in Eld's Point, Mo., forty miles above here. The invasion of the river there is worse than ever. For a stretch of two miles the erosion is in progress. The cause for the river cutting so suddenly into the Mississippi side is the big rise in the Mississippi and the low stage of the Ohio. It made the current very swift, and at this stage of the river cut into the sand strata of the perpendicular bank, with the result that the surface kept breaking off and dropping into the river.

Who Pays the Bill?
Come to think of it, the Dakota farmer who asked Roosevelt who was paying the expenses of his Pullman train with fifty-five newspaper correspondents aboard proposed a most pertinent and pointed question. Who is paying the bills, anyway? Roosevelt says the expense is being paid by the magazine, The Outlook, of which he is editor. The colonel had his fingers crossed when he said that. The enormous expense of a Pullman train running all over the continent with a retinue of correspondents, servants, train crew and supplies, amounting to many thousand dollars, could hardly be afforded by a magazine publication, so the Dakota farmer insisted that the people of the United States are paying the expenses of the Roosevelt train. In this long run it may be found that the Dakota farmer is correct. Anyhow it will take Teddy a long time to outgrow that pertinent query which he characterized as impertinent. Where does the money come from? Surely not from the trusts that the colonel says are necessary to modern commerce.--Chilliothe Constitution.

Republican Nominee for Appellate Judge.

Hon. J. G. Tomlin, of Watson, Boone County of Ky., a candidate for Judge of the Appellate Court District, was nominated by acclamation at the Republican convention at Maysville, Sept. 20th, and expects to visit every county in the district before the election Nov. 8th, as he believes he has a good chance to win. He realizes that it would be an impossibility to see all the voters in the seventeen counties during that period, but he solicits their support and vote with the assurance that if he is elected he will endeavor to fully represent the interests of the great, common people in the adjudication of all matters that come before him, with right and justice governing all decisions. Mr. Tomlin is of the Roosevelt type, believes in a square deal for every man, and his long period of usefulness has demonstrated this desire in all of his transactions. Mr. Tomlin was born in Grant County, Ky., forty-eight years ago, beginning life on the farm. His education in the public schools was supplemented by graduation from the high schools of Vincennes, Ind., and then he returned to Kentucky and taught in the public schools for five years. Appointed as Deputy U. S. Collector of Internal Revenue under Col. John J. Landrum of the Covington District he served with distinction and honor. In the meantime he began the study of law under Col. Landrum who was a leader at the bar and he soon entered the practice of the law with most successful results. Mr. Tomlin had a hard struggle from early youth, because of the lack of financial means, but he made up for it in energy, perseverance, and industry, and these good qualities coupled with the highest of morals has led him to success in all of his undertakings and placed him in good financial circumstances. He has a large practice in the different courts, and his legal ability is such that Gov. Wilson appointed him special judge to try the intricate Owen County tax cases involving a vast sum of money belonging to the county and the people, and his decisions have been uniformly favorable commented on by all sides as being clear, comprehensive, and just to all. He was also appointed judge of the Lewis Circuit Court and the people of that county were so well pleased with his services that they demanded that he make the race for appellate judge. Mr. Tomlin's life has been an open book, free from any immoral practices or intrigues, and with always an effort for the betterment of the community in which he resided. He has been identified with every good interest at his home town and all of the enterprises, eat, bear the impress of his public spirit. His help to struggling deserving people certainly speaks well for the esteem he manifests in the welfare of his fellowman. His honesty, integrity, and loyalty to principle have never been questioned. He would make an ideal supreme court judge and if the people elect him they will have no occasion to regret it.

THE MOLE.

The mole is one of the most sorely misjudged animals of which we have any knowledge. He is strictly carnivorous; he would starve to death if there was nothing but grain or other vegetable matter for him to live on. He is really a friend to the farmer. He is after the worms and various kinds of insects that prey upon the farmer's crops, and should be regarded a benefactor. Many of our friends even of the human kind have disagreeable habits and sometimes do us harm when they are trying to do good. The mole is no exception. He will throw up ridges in the garden and in the lawn. He can't help it; he is built that way. He is simply making his way through the food and in doing sometimes he throws up a ridge that lets too much air into the land and prevents plants from growing. He dries them out. He ridges up the lawn; but he is after the grub worms and other insects that have multiplied from eggs in the meadow of longstanding. Don't set traps for the mole. Cultivate him, and when you see a ridge thrown up through the garden or lawn have the boys go along and tramp it down. Learn to discriminate between your friends and your foes.--Wallace's Farmer.

AS THE "DUKE OF DURHAM"
American Dealer Sat in Chair Once Occupied By Hero of Waterloo.
The late Mr. Washington Duke, of Durham, North Carolina, at home known as "Uncle Wash," who manufactured tobacco products so extensively for a quarter of a century, used to tell a quaint little story on himself. "The first time I traveled abroad," he said, "I visited Brussels and went to see all its sights. In one of the public buildings I found an ordinary looking armchair carefully rolled off and with a chain across its front. Being tired with a hard morning of tramping, I stepped over the fence, let down the chain and, with a big sigh of relief, dropped into this chair, the only one I had seen in the building. A guard in lace and buttons was on me at once.
"No sitting in that chair!" he blun-tered. "See the card on the back?"
The Duke of Wellington once occupied that chair!
"Well, and what of it? I returned, cool as a cucumber. 'Tm Duke of Durham and alive at that!"
"This settled the matter. Down to the floor went that sunken, brushing the dust from my American shoes with his handkerchief of real European title. A way-up English title catches them every time. I had my chair out in that solid old chair of the Waterloo hero."—The Wasp.

thors Who Have Enriched the World's Literature.
It was Oliver Wendell Holmes, was it not, who owned up to his preference for reading in books to reading through them? "When I set out to read through a book," the Autocrat wrote, "I always felt that I had a task before me—but when I read in a book before me was the paragraph that I wanted, and which left its impression and became a part of my intellectual furniture." If we were only trankier, most of us would confess to being like Holmes in the matter of our reading. To be sure, we have an old-fashioned disinclination to set down a book in the middle of it; we feel it our duty to finish whatever we have once begun at the beginning; yet if we yield to our New England conscience here, we are not deterred from beginning very many books, and by "beginning" books I mean neither reading straight through their tedious opening pages, nor hastening, like a woman, to learn by the concluding chapter how it all "turns out." Open your book at any page, thick or thin;
is the true way of getting at its soul.

GRANT

Julia Dinamore Akin, only daughter of R. D. Akin and Ida McMullen Akin, of Boone Co. Ky., was born Feb. 6, 1895. Her mother died in 1906. Since that time
Julia has lived with Mrs. R. L.
Sullivan and Mrs. Akin of McVillie, attending different schools. She was a member of the first school made many friends where ever she went. For some months she has been living with her mother's aunt, Mrs. Wm. O. Oakes, at Kenton St. Dayton, Ky. attending school of that place. In the early morning of the 18th inst.
she became very ill and before her father, who is the pilot on the steam boat Almas, could reach her, became unconscious. Death came at 1:40 p. m. on Sat-Oct. 20th. The remains were shipped to Bellevue. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Hensen, pastor of the Baptist church.
She leaves dear mother, her loss her father and a host of relatives and friends. The Dayton and Bellevue schools presented a beautiful floral piece, such in token of their deep felt sympathy.
The many friends extend their sympathy to the father and mother, and thus the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, it is

BASE BALL

An aggregation of Hebron ball players came over last Saturday afternoon and tackled a Burlington squad which defeated them 8 to 3. Robt. Woods, of Big Bone, was the star for Hebron and pitched a splendid game, but was given most miserable support. Connes did the twirling for Burlington and worked very well. The twirling was standing he was getting the poorest article of support he had gone up against this season. Slayback was not up to his usual form behind the bat. The same teams will play at Hebron next Saturday afternoon, and it is Wood is given the kind of support which his box work entitles him he will be hard to beat. Hebron will be strengthened considerably and the Burlington lineup must be the best it is possible to get together.

The people of Lawrenceburg are requested to get ready for what is known as the "Presbyterian revival service" that the city experienced. This will be a great co-operative campaign by the evangelists of the city, and they to extend through the month of November. At a pastors' conference held at the home of Rev. A.
D. Davis, of the Presbyterian church, Rev. Davis was made president and supervisor of arrangements. Rev. C. D. Wilson of the P. church was appointed to confer with and enlist the services of all who would co-operate. Rev. C. O. Booth and Rev.
R. L. Guley were appointed to make arrangements for the monthly expected that all the choirs will unite under one leader and render special sacred music. Law-

Some of the exchanges have made mention of the fact that the farmers living along the lines of the railroad are being encouraged to plant corn to the surplus. This is a suggestion that might well be acted upon by the farmers. It is a suggestion that carriers have a government job, but it is by no means a "private snap." It takes a good deal of management when they are obliged to keep two horses, live in town and buy all the necessary provisions at the market price. The farmers of our county have gone over their routes during the real muddy weather at a great inconvenience and are always faithful in doing the average of their duty.
A bushel of corn or so given to the carrier would hardly be missed by the farmer, but it would be a great saving in the expense of horse feed and the generous act would certainly be appreciated by the faithful mail man.

An exchange says: The farm-at once and long and fertility, a all of them but he should keep watching them and stop as many as he can.

Rich Deposits of Phosphate.

(From Lexington Herald.)
Recently in Woodford county has been discovered by a Southern company, the richest deposits of phosphate yet located in the United States. The geological maps and surveys of Kentucky, long in existence, and compiled from year to year, show ed a large area of country in the neighborhood of Midway, that contained large deposits of phosphorus bearing rock, but it was never ascertained that it was to be found in such quantities and of such quality as recent developments have disclosed.
For the past year or more operators from the Tennessee fields have quietly and almost secretly been making explorations, with the result that the entire deposit has been definitely defined and the best of the lands leased and purchased. The company and men of science from all parts of the country, as well as the representatives of the chemical phosphate industry, have been routed to the Woodford county deposits to be the richest in the United States.

So quietly has the land underneath this valuable deposit been acquired that no one realized what was being done, but now that the importance and value of the discovery has become known the owners of the land supposed to contain any workable quantity of the deposit, are asking fabulous prices for rights in or less than the entire Kentucky Phosphate Company recently organized in this city, has acquired the greater portion of the territory, and will soon open offices in this city.

It is known that here and there some very encouraging out-croppings have been found in Payette county, some very rich specimens having been uncovered in the foundation plans of the new Experiment Station building at the State University.

Some of the most recent authorities on plant food in the United States, Dr. Hopkins, of the University of Illinois, visiting here, and what is more, investigation of the deposit home with him for analysis, and the test made by him reveals the fact that the deposit, from its chemical properties, is rich enough in bone lime phosphate ingredients to be ground and sold for fertilizing purposes without washing or other treatment, thus producing a fertilizer of the greatest value, which is much better than drying and grinding being necessary.

The importance of this discovery is best indicated by the fact that phosphorus has been found to be the most important as well as the most essential element yet discovered, and the quantity yet discovered, measured by the demand, is out of all proportion.
Recent scientific investigations disclose the fact that the crop of the United States annually consumes 12,000,000 tons of the natural phosphorus compounds.
The last Geological survey disclosed the alarming fact that the entire known deposit in the United States did not exceed 120, 000,000 tons, but twelve years supply, and what is more, preparations for erecting a plant near Midway in the near future, in order to be in the market by next spring.

Next Monday night is Halloween.
The mails have been very irregular this week from some cause.

There may be a change for the worse any day in the weather.

The coal haulers have begin to show considerable activity in the

SYNOPSIS.

Capt. Nathaniel Plum, of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Bear Island, stronghold of the Mormons. He is audaciously confronted by Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and a member of the Mormon council, who tells him that he is expected. Price ignores Nat's protestations that he has got the wrong man, and bargains for the annihilation aboard the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. Near Price's cabin Nat sees the frightened face of a young woman who disappears in the darkness, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Price's visit to the island is to demand settlement from the king, Strang, for the looting of his ship some time previously, supposedly by Mormons. Casey, the mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if Nat does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat to the darkness, to the king's home, and through a window he sees the king and his wife, among whom is the lady of the lilacs, whom Price says is the seventh wife. Plum calls at the king's place, where he is warned by a young woman that his life is in danger. Strang receives Plum cordially, professes indignation when he hears the captain's grievance, and promises to punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning of his danger. He notices Nat, who is being pursued by the king's order. Arber Croche, the sheriff and father of Winnie, the girl who warned Nat, to pursue and kill the two men.

CHAPTER V

The Mystery.

Hardly had Nathaniel fought his way through the thin crowd of startled spectators along the whirling platform before the enormity of his offense in interrupting the king's justice dawned upon him. He was not sorry that he had responded to the mute appeal of the girl who had entered so strangely into his life. He rejoiced at the spirit that had moved him to action, that had fired his blood and put the strength of his giant in his arms, and his nerves tingled with an unreasoning joy that he had leaped all barriers which in cooler moments would have restrained him, and which fixed in his excited brain only the memory of the beautiful face that had sought his own in those crucial moments of his suffering. The girl had turned to him and to him alone among all those men. He had heard her voice, he had felt the soft sweep of her hair as she severed the prisoner's tongs, he had caught the flash of her eyes and the movement of her lips as she dashed himself into the crowd. And as he sped swiftly up the slope he considered himself amply repaid for all he had done. His blood was stirred as if by the fire of sharp wines; he was still in a tension of fighting excitement. Yet no sooner had he fought himself clear of the mob than his better judgment leaped into the ascendancy. It danger had been lurking for him before it was doubly threatening now and he was sufficiently possessed of the spirit of self preservation to exult at the speed with which he was enabled to leave pursuit behind. A single glance over his shoulder assured him that the man whom he had saved from the prophet's wrath was saved from his heels. His first impulse was to direct his flight toward Obadiah's cabin; his second to follow the path that led to his ship. At this hour some of his men would surely be awaiting him in a small boat and once aboard the Typhoon he could continue his campaign against the Mormon king with better chances of success than as a lone fugitive on the island. Besides, he knew what Casey would do at sundown.

At the top of the slope he stopped and waited for the other to come up to him.

"I've got a ship off there," he called, pointing inland. "Take a short cut to the point at the head of the island. There's a boat waiting for us!"

Nell came up panting. He was breathing so hard that for a moment he found it impossible to speak but in his eyes there was a look that told his unbounded gratitude. "They were clear, fearless eyes, with the blue glint of steel in their lids, and he held out his hands to Nathaniel, they were luminous with the joy of his deliverance."

"Thank you, Captain Plum!" He spoke his companion's name with the assurance of one who had known it for a long time. "If they come the dogs there will be no time for the ship," he added, with a suggestive hunch of his naked shoulders. "Follow me!"

There was no alarm in his voice and Nathaniel caught the flashing gleam of white teeth as Nell smiled grimly at him, running in the lead. From the man's eyes the master of the Typhoon had read up the companion as a fighter. The smile was confident, and yet signaling danger—warned him that he was not to be followed.

followed close behind without question. A dense robe up the patch Nell turned into a dense thicket of briars and underbrush and for ten minutes they plunged through the pathless jungle. Now and then Nathaniel saw the three red stripes of the whipper's lash upon the bare shoulders of the man ahead and to these every step seemed to add new wounds made by the thorns. As they came out upon an old roadway the captain stripped off his coat and Nell thrust himself into it as they ran.

Even in these first minutes of their flight Nathaniel was thrilled by another thought than that of the peril behind them. Whom had he saved? Who was this clear-eyed young fellow for whom the girl had so openly sacrificed herself at the whipping post, about whom she had thrown her arms and covered with her protection of her glorious hair? With his joy at having served her there was mingled a chilling doubt as these questions formed themselves in his mind. Obadiah's vague suggestions, the scene in the king's room, the night visits of the girl to the councilor's cabin—and last of all this incident at the fall saved upon him now with another meaning, with a sign!

The enthusiasm in his veins. He was sure that he was near the solution of the mysterious events in which he had become involved, and yet this knowledge brought with it something of apprehension, something which made him anticipate and yet dread the moment when the fugitive ahead would stop in his flight, and he might ask him those questions which would at least relieve him of his burden of doubt. They had traveled a mile through forest unbroken by path or road when Nell halted on the edge of a little stream that ran into a swamp. Pointing into the tangled fen with a confident smile he plunged to his waist in the water and waded slowly through the slough into the gloom of the densest alder. A few minutes later he turned to the shore and the soft glow gave place to firm ground. Before Nathaniel had cleared the stream he saw his companion drop to his knees beside a fallen log and when he came up to him he was unwrapping a piece of canvas from about a gun. With a warning gesture he rose to his feet and in thirty seconds the men stood and listened. No sound came to them but the chirp of a startled squirrel and the barking of a dog in the direction of St. James.

"They haven't turned out the dogs yet," said Nell, holding a hand against his heaving chest. "If they do they can't reach us through that slough." He leaned his rifle against the log and again thrusting an arm into the place where it had been concealed drew forth a small box.

"My Sister, Captain Plum."

"Powder and ball—and grub!" he laughed. "You see I am a sort of revolutionist and have my big plan. Tomorrow I will be a martyr."

He spoke as quietly as though his words but carried a careless jest.

"A martyr?" laughed Nathaniel, looking down into the smiling, sweating face.

"Yes, tomorrow I shall kill Strang." The man was so excited in Nell's voice as he stood erect. The smile did not leave his lips. But in his eyes there shone that which neither words nor smiling lips revealed, a reckless, blazing fury hidden deep in them—so deep that Nathaniel stared to assure himself what it was. The other saw the doubt in his face.

"Tomorrow I shall kill Strang," he repeated. "I shall kill him with this gun from under the window of his house through which you saw Marion."

"Marion!" exclaimed Nathaniel. "Marion—" He leaned forward eagerly, questioning. "Tell me—"

"My sister, Captain Plum!" It seemed to Nathaniel that every fiber in his body was stretched to the breaking point. He reached out, dazed by what he had heard and with both hands seized Nell's arm.

"Your sister—who came to you at the whipping post?"

"That was Marion."

"And—Strang's wife?"

"No!" cried Nell. "No—not his wife!" He drew back from Nathaniel's touch as if the question had stabbed him to the heart. The passion that had slumbered in his eyes burst into savage flame and his face became suddenly terrible to look upon. There was a tremor in his quivering emotion in his voice. "Obadiah told Marion that help might come to us through you and Marion brought the word to me at the fall last night—after she had seen you at the window. The old councilor kept his word! You have saved her!"

"Saved her!" gasped Nathaniel. "From what? How? A hundred questions seemed leaping from his heart to his lips."

"From Strang. Good God, don't you understand? I tell you that I am going to kill Strang!"

Nell stood as though appalled by his companion's incomprehension. "I am going to kill Strang; I tell you!" he cried again, the fire burning deeper through the sweat of his cheeks.

Nathaniel's bewilderment still shone in his face.

"She is not Strang's wife," he spoke softly, as if to himself. "And she is not—" His face flushed as he nearly spoke the words. "Obadiah lied!" He looked squarely into Nell's eyes. "No, I don't understand you. The councilor said that she—that Marion was Strang's wife. He told me nothing more than that, nothing of her trouble, nothing about you. Until this moment I have been completely mystified. Only her eyes led me to do what I did at the fall."

Nell gazed at him in astonishment. "Obadiah told you—nothing?" he asked incredulously.

"Not a word about you or Marion except that Marion was the king's seventh wife. But he hinted at many things and kept me on the trail, all ways expecting, always watching, and yet every hour was one of mystery."

"The disappointment in his instant. What does it all mean? Why are you going to kill Strang? Why?"

Nell interrupted him with a cry so poignant in its wretchedness that the last question died upon his lips.

"I thought that the councilor had told you all," he said. "I thought you knew." The disappointment in his voice was almost despair. "Then it was only accidentally—you helped us!"

"Only accidentally that I helped you—yes! But Marion—" Nathaniel crushed Nell's hand in both his own and his eyes betrayed more than he would have said. "I've got an armed ship and a dozen men out there and if I can help Marion by blowing up St. James—I'll do it!"

For a time only the tense breathing of the two broke the silence of their lips. They looked into each other's face, Nathaniel with all the eagerness of the peasant with which Marion had stirred his soul, Nell half doubting, as if he were trying to find in this man's eyes the friendship which he had not questioned a few minutes before.

"Obadiah told you nothing?" he asked again, as if still unbelieving. "Nothing."

"And you have not seen Marion—to talk—"

"No."

Nathaniel had dropped his companion's hand, and now Nell walked to the log and sat down with his face turned in the direction from which their pursuers must come if they entered the swamp.

Suddenly the memory of Obadiah's note shot into Nathaniel's head, the councilor's admonition, his allusion to a visitor. With this memory there returned to him Obadiah's words at the temple, "If you had remained at the cabin, Nat, you would have known that I was your friend. She would have come to you, but now—it is impossible." For the first time the truth began to dawn upon him. He went and sat down beside Nell.

Damages for a Sale of Morphine. An important decision with reference to the sale of morphine has recently been given by the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Dr. Corcoran, a pharmacist, had sold morphine without a medical prescription to a student at St. James, the latter gave it to one of his comrades, who as a result of taking it contracted the morphine habit.

The father of the victim then brought an action for damages against the chemist, who in his defense said, in the first place, that he was responsible only for his own action, but not for the action of the student who had given the morphine to his comrade, and in the second place, that he had no direct connection with the injury sustained by the student of the morphine. The lower court upheld this view, but the higher tribunal ordered the chemist to pay 100 francs fine and 4,000 francs damages on the ground that a pharmacist, who sells a medical prescription without a medical prescription, knows that he is liable for whatever misfortune may be made of it, either by the first recipient or by the next person who comes into possession of it.—Paris letter to the London Lancet.

Not Very Accurate. Senator Root at Senator Depew's farewell dinner in his honor in Washington, said, about his European tour, "Well, I hope I'll gather over there more accurate information than that which Lady Salisbury's housekeeper used to give her American visitors."

Lady Salisbury had a housekeeper who, in showing American and other visitors over Salisbury castle, would always pause before a painting of Catherine d'Medici, sister of Venus d'Medici, and say: "This lovely painting is a portrait of Catherine d'Medici, sister of Venus d'Medici."

TERRIBLE SUFFERING ENDED.

How An Allegan, Mich., Woman Regained Her Health.

Mrs. Robert Schwabe, R. F. D. No. 2, Allegan, Mich., says: "Doctors could not cure me and I was rapidly running into Bright's disease. Kidney secretions were like blood and I awoke at 10 times at night to void them. I became frightened at my condition. My sight began to fail and pains in my back were like knife-thrusts. I cried for hours, unable to control my nerves. After I started using Doan's Kidney Pills, I began to feel better and soon I was cured. I am a living testimonial of their merit."

Childlike Ignorance.

Laura Jean Libbey, discussing in Brooklyn her successful appearance on the stage, said:

"I talk in my monologue about love, marriage and the other interests of the heart. On these subjects women, especially young women, are strangely ignorant."

"They really make me think, you know, of the little girl who was asked by her teacher:

"What can you tell us about Solomon?"

"Solomon," replied the little girl, "was very fond of animals."

"And how, my dear," said the teacher, "do you make that out?"

"Because," answered the little girl, "the Bible says he had 500 porcupines."

Who Scratched the Bathtub?

Nice, porcelain bathtub, too; and all the folks thought it was just lovely. But somebody was washing it out and used common laundry soap—the yellow kind with rosin and strong caustic in it—and away went the enamel and the finish. (If that kind of soap will harm porcelain enamel, what won't it do to clothes?) "Easy Task Soap," the pure, white, antiseptic, five-cent-a-cake kind, will not harm anything but dirt. Try two cakes and get your money back if it isn't as represented.

He Knew.

A small boy brought up by a fire-eating father to hate anything connected with the word of the English was assigned to study to eat dinner with the nurse while the family entertained a genuine English lord in the dining room. The grown-up meal had come to that "twenty minutes past" stage where the young man halts directly, when a childish trouble fell upon the dumb-waiter shaft from the kitchen. This is what the astonished nobleman heard:

"Fe, fi, fo, fum, I smell the blood of an Englishman—Wasp."

The word "tired" is much used and abused.

COFFEE WAS IT.

People Slowly Learn the Facts.

"All my life I have been such a slave to coffee that the very aroma of it was enough to set my nerves quivering. I kept gradually losing my health but I used to say 'Nonsense, it don't hurt me.'"

"Slowly I was forced to admit the truth and the result was that my whole nervous force was shattered."

"My heart became weak and uncertain in its action and that frightened me. Finally my physician told me, about a year ago, that I must stop drinking coffee or I could never expect to be well again."

"I was in despair, for the very thought of the medicines I had tried so many times nauseated me. I thought of Postum but could hardly bring myself to give up the coffee."

"Finally I concluded that I owed it to myself to give Postum a trial. So I got a package and carefully followed the directions, and what a delicious, nourishing, rich drink it was! Do you know I found it very easy to shift from coffee to Postum and not mind the change at all!"

"Almost immediately after I made the change I found myself better, and as the days went by I kept on improving. My nerves grew sound and steady, I slept well and felt strong and well-balanced all the time."

"Now I am completely cured, with the old nervousness and sickness all gone. In every way I am well once more."

It pays to give up the drink that acts on some like a poison, for health is the greatest fortune one can have. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in plain, "There's a Reason."

The Recorder is authorized to announce Chas. W. Nagel, of Newport, as the Republican candidate for Congress. Election Tuesday, Nov. 9th. Your vote and support respectfully solicited.

Passing of the B. T. S.

The cutting off of the 1910 tobacco pool by the B. T. S. has been the cause of much speculation as to the future of tobacco. This is a question I have been trying to solve for thirty years, and if it had not been for the mistakes I have made and the many opposing interests I had to meet, I could have solved it very successfully for myself, but have always found that there were other individuals and other interests that I had to consider and respect to gain even partial success, so it must be with any individual or organization.

Now let us profit by the past experience and mistakes that have been the several tobacco organizations in the Burley belt, and lay aside all bias and bitter feeling and cultivate better and more generous spirit for our fellowman, and concede to everyone the right to express himself freely on the tobacco question without fear of being shot, whipped or burnt out, and meet his objections and contentions with sound and reasonable argument and cut out the abusive and threatening language, so freely indulged in by a large majority of the public speakers in their one-sided argument on the subject of pooling. Treat the question of pooling as a business proposition without appealing to prejudice and passion and so present it to the growers, and recognize the fact that the trusts and the American Tobacco Company are fixed and substantial organizations and all the denunciation, abuse and invective we can heap upon them will not drive them out of business or change their policy; and so long as we have to depend on the A. T. Co. to buy the bulk of our tobacco, we should meet them on their own terms. Deal with conditions as we find them and not with theories that change every day. Make friends instead of enemies should be our fixed policy.

The tobacco question is a big question and needs to be engineered by wise and conservative men, free from passion and abnormal greed, and men who will manage it in the exclusive interest of the grower, for it is the grower's crop for money, and ought to be conserved for him and him alone.

Many plans will be suggested for the solution of present conditions. The plan I would suggest contemplates the delivery of tobacco direct from the grower to the purchaser, letting the purchaser establish his own receiving house and the grower delivering it on wagon and getting his money to take home with him.

First, Organize local unions and let local unions organize county unions, fees from local unions to pay all necessary expense—no salaries. Each county manager and controller its tobacco as the growers may decide and then all counties cooperate in selling or holding. Let all farmers become members of the society, but allowed to vote only on the management of such product as they are interested in, but may be present if they desire with any product it is under consideration.

Second, Let organization pool tobacco and when sold place a grader at receiving house to see that each grower gets the proper grade on his tobacco and right amount of money, by one-half of one per cent. retained by society for expenses necessary to properly conduct the business.

If tobacco has to be redried and packed in hogheads let each grower pack his own tobacco under supervision of grader if he so desires, and let him be responsible for the condition of his tobacco. Each county establish pooling houses for small crops or for those who desire to have their tobacco handled. If tobacco has to be stored that can be provided for when necessary. Make it strictly a farmers' organization and if any County Organization or Appellate judges desire to take an active part in the organization, let him resign at once, or observe strictly the proprieties of a judge. Let the organization so manage their business as to avoid the courts, by giving the grower a contract which recognizes and binds both parties alike, and that prevents the corraling of the weak to be exploited by the strong, and then we will have harmony, success and justice.

I attribute the failure of the B. T. S. as due to abnormal greed, misrepresentation of contract and reputation of the A. T. S. of E. added to their failure to settle up the 1906 and 1907 pools and making a satisfactory showing of the business done in December. There is no previous precedent of any business of this nature and magnitude running for years without any kind of exhibit before the public, especially where so many were interested.

"Who is You, Anyhow?"
While President Roosevelt was on his famous Louisiana bear-hunting trip he passed by an old colored man's cabin and saw two fine hounds in the yard. Mr. Roosevelt made several offers for the hounds, each larger than the last; but the old man shook his head. Finally the President said:
"If you knew who I am you would sell me those dogs."
"Sell you dem houn' dogs, if I knowed who you is?" exclaimed the old man. "Who is you, anyhow?"
"I am President Roosevelt," was the reply, uttered in an impressive tone.
The old man looked at him a moment, and then said: "See here, I wouldn't care if you was Pookah, I wouldn't care if you was Pookah, but I wouldn't care if you couldn't get dem dogs!"

One small farmer feeds and clothes his family from the proceeds of butter and milk which he gets from one Jersey cow. The record of this one cow last year was 400 pounds of butter and 100 gallons of milk, which netted the owner about $250.

JUDGE JOHN M. LASSING,

Hon. John M. Lassing, Democrat, is candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals in this appellate district, was born under the azure sky of this county, first seeing the light of day November 8th, 1864. He is the oldest son of the late Dr. H. C. Lassing, of Union neighborhood. In the county's common schools and at White Haven Academy he received his early education, and graduated from the Central University of Richmond, Ky., in 1884. Leaving college he took up school teaching, and at the same time devoted all his spare time to reading law under the late F. Riddell. He was admitted to practice in 1887. Not content with this, however, he became a student in the renowned Cincinnati Law School, and graduated with the Class of '88, and located in Burlington, the practice of law June 4, 1889, and soon built himself a practice well showing his thoroughness and the confidence reposed in him by an appreciative community. He was twice elected County Attorney without opposition in his party. May, 1901, he was appointed to the office of Circuit Court Judge, to fill the vacancy made by death of the late Judge Greene. In the same year he was nominated and elected without opposition in his party to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Greene, and following this he was again nominated without opposition and elected for a six-year term, to begin January 1st, 1904. At the time the appointment was made he was the youngest Circuit Court Judge in the State, and the expeditious and business like manner in which he discharged the duties soon gained for him the reputation of being one of the best circuit judges in the State. Having filled out Judge Greene's term Judge Lassing was again nominated and elected without opposition, to a full term as Circuit Judge, but did not fill out the term, resigning to accept the appointment by Gov. Beckham to the vacancy on the appellate bench caused by the resignation of Judge Thomas H. Paynter, when he was elected U. S. Senator. At the next regular election after Judge Paynter's resignation, Judge Lassing was nominated without opposition in his party, and was triumphantly elected at the regular election. Judge Lassing is a fearless official, and the Appellate Court, the highest tribunal in the state, has proven a prolific field in which to display his ability and courage. Many of the opinions handed down by him since he became a member of the Court of Appeals, have, for their sound principles of law and the very clear manner in which the same were set forth, attracted attention in other states and elicited most favorable comments. Having served about seven years as a member of the Court of Appeals and being now in the prime of life, Judge Lassing is especially well equipped for the duties of the office to which he seeks reelection, and if he is successful his useful career will be prolonged for the benefit of the people of the whole State. Being a native of Boone county her people will take a pride in rallying to his support at the November election and giving him a vote that will testify as to their esteem of him as a man, as well as to show the high regard they have for him as an official. The host of friends Judge Lassing has made in every community where he has resided is the strongest testimonial possible of his worth as a private citizen. He is always ready to help extend any public enterprise or those in need, traits that have made him undefeatable politically where acquainted.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

(By Supt. Riley.)
The teachers' meeting at Verona certain was a success. Two hundred people attended the meeting. Truly the people of Verona are awake as to things educational. When people want a thing they usually get it. Verona wanted a school and she is getting her desire fulfilled. There were a number of unusual papers on the usual subjects. Several teachers were absent. Of course we expect to hear excuses. The teachers who are doing our best usually attend such meetings, while the other teachers need the enthusiasm and helpful suggestions of the more experienced teachers. The program committees of other divisions should not forget the time of the teachers' meetings. Be sure to send in your program in time for publication. Teachers of the rural schools should prepare the students of the eighth grade for the Common School graduates' examination. Remember the student receiving the highest general average in either the January or May examination will receive a gold medal, the gift of Mr. A. B. Rouse. These examinations will be more difficult each year and the status of the High Schools raised.

GOVERNMENT INCORPORATION

TEXT OF PART OF SENATOR PAYNTER'S ADDRESS AT VERSAILLES.

POWER OF CENTRALIZATION

A Lawyer's Logic Attacks a Measure Whose Passage Is Urged by the National Administration.

Senator Thomas H. Paynter delivered an address at Versailles Monday night. He said, in part, as follows:

In the discussion in this campaign I have not seen any reference made to a very important bill which was introduced at the last session in congress, providing that corporations doing interstate business might avail themselves of its provisions, and have granted to them articles of incorporation. It is an administration measure and its passage is urged by President Taft. It may properly be designated as the administration federal incorporation bill. No effort was made to pass it at the last session of congress as the railroad rate bill and postal savings bank bill met with such strong opposition and were so changed in their final passage the president perhaps thought it would be better not to press it until a future time. This measure is far reaching in its effect, and will, if it becomes a law, revolutionize the method of creating corporations. It is proposed to transfer from the states to the federal government the right of control and the method and purposes of their taxation. It is one of the most revolutionary bills ever proposed in congress. It is not introduced by a senator as an expression of his views on the question, but for the purpose of carrying out the policy of the administration. It, therefore, is a matter of great public concern and should elicit the attention and particular consideration of the electorate of the entire country. If it should become a law it will fix the policy of the federal government—great business concerns will be projected and carried on under its terms. When once in operation it will continue during the life of the republic. It will be more difficult to get rid of it than to free the consumers of the wrongs inflicted upon them by unjust burdens resulting from our protective tariff system. If it becomes a law it will affect 46 and soon 48 sovereign states and more than ninety millions of people.

Discusses Corporations.

It is not my purpose to discuss the constitutional question that may arise if the bill becomes a law, but simply the practical operation of it. The constitutional phase of the question will be discussed by me later on at a different time and place. Under its terms every corporation doing an interstate business can change its articles of incorporation, can give up its state charter and take out a federal one. It is safe to say that more than one-half of the business of the country has been done by corporations. The railroads, insurance companies, telegraph companies, telephone companies, street railways, interurban roads, when they do an interstate business; steel corporations, standard oil, etc., etc., are incorporated companies, and doing an interstate business. When we contemplate the vast amount of business these and other great incorporated companies do, it is manifest that the statement that one-half of the business of the country is done by corporations is a conservative estimate.

Federal Charters.

Every dry goods merchant, every grocery merchant, every manufacturer, every distiller, every dealer in grain and stock, every meat packer; in fact, all companies or persons who are now engaged or may desire to engage in interstate business may become incorporated under the proposed federal law. If the bill is passed, all corporations that can conveniently do so will take out federal charters. Under the terms of the bill all actions against corporations which are federal charters when the amount claimed is over $2,000, will be brought in the federal courts. The effect would be that the principal litigation will be transferred from the state to the federal courts. This would entail great additional expense on persons who are compelled to sue such corporations. They would be compelled, in many instances, to travel great distances to have their claims adjudicated, thus incurring hotel bills for themselves, their witnesses and attorneys. These necessary expenses would, in many instances, deter persons with just claims from bringing actions against these corporations. Thus it would be a practical denial of justice. They could not have claims tried in a convenient forum, and the effect would be practically to deny them the right to have their cases tried by a jury of the vicinage. In most of the cases so tried there would be involved a conflict between the weaker plaintiff and the stronger defendant, and the defendant left practically with the privilege of selecting the forum in which the case should be tried. The effect of such a law would prove ruinous to the rights and fortunes of countless litigants. The proposed legislation is in the interest of privileged corporations and amounts to a denial of trial in the jurisdictions where the citizen is the better able to have his rights adjudicated without working an injustice to the rights of the defendants. I am one of those who believe that the state courts can be trusted to administer justice between a citizen of the state and any individual or corporation doing business in the state where the citizen resides.

Judges Are Honest.

I believe the judges of the state courts are as honest and capable as are the judges of the federal courts. I believe the juries selected in the state courts are as fair, with as high sense of right and justice as those in the federal courts. As an evidence of my sincerity upon this question, I ask the privilege of saying that I had much to do with the enactment of the amendment to the employers' liability act, which gives the state courts concurrent jurisdiction with the federal courts, in cases arising under that act, and especially with that part of it which prevents the removal of an action commenced in the state courts to the federal court. I was greatly surprised, after the amendment had been adopted, when Senator Hale arose and commended the senate for its first step in the right direction of restoring to the state courts their rightful jurisdiction.

Taxation

There is another question of vast importance to be considered in connection with the proposed legislation. It is one of taxation. The bill does not grant to the states the right to tax the capital stock or franchise of such corporations. The states could not tax them without the consent of congress. As the bill does not give the consent of congress that the states may do so, it is equivalent to a denial of such right. Even if congress at any time granted such right, it could withdraw it at pleasure. The enjoyment of such right would be only a matter of grace. The supreme court has so held. In McCulloch v. Maryland, a Wheat, it is said: "The power to tax is the power to destroy." Fearing that the states would hamper or embarrass corporations with federal charters, it is not likely that a congress which would pass and retain a federal incorporation act would ever give its consent that a tax should be imposed on corporations by the states. The history of congress will not justify the conclusion that it readily surrenders its power to tax or control when it exists. If the proposed legislation should be carried into effect, the property that would be taken from the state, county and municipal taxes would be enormous. The loss of such revenues by the states, counties and municipalities would most seriously cripple them. It would naturally result in an increase of taxation on other species of property to make up the loss of revenue. This would be a most serious question for most of the states. Kentucky, her counties and municipalities, would be thus deprived of perhaps one-half million of dollars of their annual revenues. Many states would sustain even a much greater loss than would Kentucky.

Police Power.

A federal incorporation act would remove the corporations from the police power of the state. It would be most unfortunate.

Centralization of Power.

The proposed legislation would be the greatest advance ever taken towards centralization of power in the federal government. It would deprive the states of a power that they had enjoyed since the creation of this government. In a large measure they would be deprived of the right of local self-government. No more serious blow can be struck at a state than to deprive it of any of its proper sources of revenue. It can exist only by the enjoyment of the right to collect sufficient revenue for its support. It is important that the states should not be deprived of proper sources of revenue.

Self-Government.

The principle of local self-government was preserved in the states and to the people except such as were granted to the federal government. It was the design of its framers to avoid the ills with which other countries have been cursed by reason of the centralization of power. Jefferson, Franklin and their compatriots seemed to have been given, as it were, wisdom by inspiration to attempt to protect the people from the baleful effects of centralized power. The people enjoy no right that is so important to be preserved as the right of local self-government. It occurs to me it is proper at this time to review the history of our constitution to see what the illustrious patriots, wise statesmen and great jurists have said with reference to the question which vitally affects our political rights. To aid me in this discussion I shall quote the words of that apostle of liberty, the founder of our political faith; of an eminent jurist of opposing political faith; of a political philosopher, and of a great statesman.

Jefferson said: "Upon the maintenance of local self-government depend liberty and the right of man in every government."

Judge Cooley said: "Local self-government is part of the very nature of the race to which we belong."

DeToqueville, in his notable work, "Democracy in America," said:

"A centralized administration is fit only to enervate the nations in which it exists." He then added: "I am also convinced that Democratic nations are most likely to fall beneath the yoke of a centralized administration."

And in his first message to the American congress, Lincoln said: "To remain inviolate the rights of the states to order and control under the constitution their own affairs by their own judgment exclusively is essential for the preservation of that balance of power on which our institutions rest."

Proposed Legislation a Menace.

The proposed legislation is a menace to local self-government. It is a danger which threatens democratic government; to give to the president, as he would have, a dominant influence over the great corporations now doing business by virtue of rights conferred by the states and territories, would be giving him a despotic power. To do so would not only tend strongly toward centralizing the powers of government, but the administration of them as well. It would be almost as dangerous a power to confer upon the president as he would have if the government became the owner of the railroads of the country. It would be easier to levy political contributions on the corporations with federal charters, than it would be if the government owned the railroads. If the centralization of the federal government continues with the rapidity that we have seen for the past few years, the powers of the states will gradually be absorbed by the federal government. If it so continues, it may not be as bad as it is in Turkey, where the churches, schools, factories, mills, roads, bridges, can not be built, or newspapers printed, without the consent from the powers at Constantinople, still it will practically destroy local self-government. Let us hope that congress will never pass such an act. But the president, with all his patronage and power, may be able to do so. It is but fair to presume that he will endeavor to have it passed. If he by virtue of his great office can do so, can have the bill enacted into a law, then it is certainly dangerous to place in his hands, in the hands of any president, the power to control corporations, which enjoy franchises under the proposed act. If this is done, it would seem that we were galloping to the end of democratic government. A federal bureaucracy would be substituted therefor. Personal liberty, our most important constitutional right, would be endangered, and our property rights imperiled. One of the arguments for the proposed legislation is that it would enable the government to eradicate the trusts. It is not necessary to enact such a law for this purpose. The trust evils can be destroyed or greatly mitigated by correcting our tariff system under which they were made possible and have prospered and by enforcing the anti-trust law. In an effort to get rid of existing evils it is not the part of wisdom to enter upon a perilous sea, full of dangers, thus courting the destruction of the most valued safeguards given us by those who supposed that they had secured to themselves and to succeeding generations the priceless guaranty of liberty and the sacred rights of property.

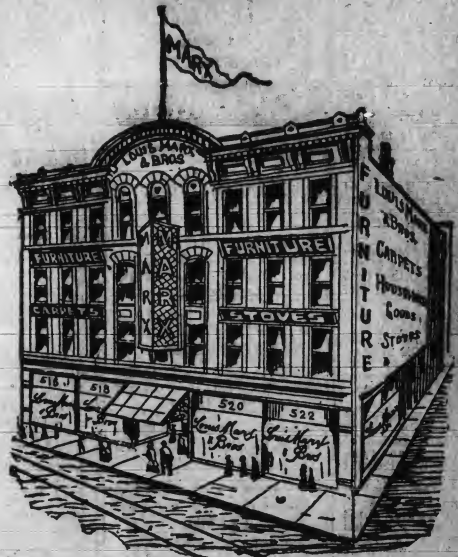

New Nationalism.

New nationalism is a heresy preached by an ex-president, the most spectacular figure who has ever appeared upon the stage of American politics. If he is not a menacing figure, it is because of the strength of our institutions and the further fact that the sound and conservative citizens have a true estimate of his character and leadership. That he is a striking and forceful figure in the political affairs of the country there can be no doubt. The greater the hold he has upon the judgment of the people the greater his error in leading them into error. In shaping their political affairs, if his views are unsound. If the words "new nationalism" mean anything, they mean that the government is to exercise different functions, constitutional or otherwise, which have not heretofore been claimed to exist or have been exercised. In his declaration for new nationalism he necessarily means, if he means anything, that there must be a new constitutional construction and new methods in the administration of governmental affairs under a new interpretation to be given the constitution. He evidently expects to lead the "old nationalists" which has for its foundation the constitution as construed by the greatest jurists the world has ever seen. If we had any doubt as to his meaning in proclaiming his adherence to a new nationalism it would be removed by the illustration he has pressed upon the public the correctness of his views.

He is reported almost daily by the press as saying, "So is the repeating rifle a new thing, but where would the army be if it said it wasn't going to use the repeating rifle because the good old flintlock was fine enough for their forefathers?" I have no doubt that the language quoted illustrates his view as to how the organic law of the land should be regarded by the chief executive, congress and the courts. He does not think it does, and was intended to mean by those who penned and adopted it, the same to-day, to-morrow and forever, unless changed in the manner provided therein. It might be refreshing at this point to quote from a paper that has been held in high esteem by all Americans as one of the ablest and most patriotic addresses ever delivered. So high-esteemed is that it is read annually in the senate and house of representatives. I refer to Washington's farewell address, wherein he said:

"If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in a way which the constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for, though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit, which the use can at any time yield."

The quotations which I have made from Jefferson, Cooley, DeToqueville and Lincoln are clearly applicable to the question of new nationalism. It is not surprising to those who are familiar with the ex-president's method of reasoning and his evident desire to be in the limelight that he announces a new doctrine. He believes in the centralization of power. He was in favor of congress legislating upon the subject of insurance, marriage and child labor. I think it was in an address before the Texas legislature that Senator Culbertson said that Mr. Roosevelt's cabinet advised him that it was unconstitutional to enforce the San Domingo treaty without the approval of the senate, and that he responded that he did not care in the least for the fact of its unconstitutionality. It is currently reported in Washington that he, on one occasion, said that he wished he had a good constitutional lawyer in his cabinet. The party to whom he made the remark reminded him that he had Taft and Root, two of the best in the country, and that he replied that that was true, but that they never agreed with him. The people can not safely follow the leadership of one who evidently does not believe that the constitution means to-day what it did to Marshall and Miller and to the other judges who had given lustre and fame to the supreme court of the United States.

County Court Clerk, J. H. Rogers
Crosses Over the Silent

Jameson Had a Warm Heart and Was Always Happy When Doing Some Kind and Charitable Act for a Friend.

His Death A Terrible Shock To His Relatives and The Entire County.

Later the Rogers family removed to a farm near Walton, upon which Jameson spent the years of his mature manhood. His education was obtained at the public and private schools of Verona, a number of Boone county's best teachers having at various times been in charge of the schools he attended.

He was never married though rather devoted to his family and affections to his aged father and mother—the latter now dead—and his brother and sisters.

Being the oldest son for many years he has been the head and mainstay; his extreme and delicate constitution exhibited to his family on all occasions, was, indeed, beautiful to witness, as it will always be sacredly cherished by his family, which, by the way, is family bound together by the ties of love so intensely strong as to excite general notice.

Having been born of parents of the Primitive Baptist church, he held to that faith and though not a member, his faith in God and love for Him and His people, were generally known.

In his later years his health becoming impaired, he desiring to leave the farm he went before the people of his county and was elected to the office of County Clerk, entering upon his official duties the 1st day of Jan. 1910. He was a careful, painstaking officer, prompt and exact in his work, yet courteous and affable to all, and the people of Burlington and vicinity, where he lived during his brief official career, soon came to recognize him as an able and faithful officer and a gentleman of sterling integrity.

Beside his father, aged now nearly eighty-one, he leaves one brother, W. Russell Rogers, and three sisters, Mrs. C. C. Roberts, Sallie and Elizabeth Rogers.

Many pleasant acquaintances and devoted friends bow their heads in grief, joining his family with feelings of deep sorrow at his sudden death. Peace to his memory.

Card of Thanks—
We wish to express our sincere thanks for the kindness and sympathy shown by the sudden loss of our beloved son and brother Jameson H. Rogers, especially do we thank the citizens of Burlington.

Coughs of Children

the guest of Mrs. Dudley Rouse and Mrs. Peddicord from last Thursday till Monday.

H. V. Tanner, of Pt. Pleasant neighborhood, dropped in upon the Recorder, for a minute, one day last week. He is one of the prosperous young men of his part of the county, being an all-around hustler.

Edward Hawes, boss painter at Lakeland Asylum for the insane, accompanied by his wife and two children, arrived last Saturday evening to permit of a few days with their relatives in Burlington and the vicinity of Florence.

Thomas Morris, of Erlanger neighborhood, a faithful supporter of the Recorder was a caller at the office, one day last week. Mr. Morris does not visit the capitol of Boone very often, being one of those whose life is too busy to permit of a waste of time in unnecessary trips. He is a pleasant gentleman to be with.

C. C. Roberts and wife visited Augusta, Bracken county, last Thursday, where Mr. Roberts has been on a trade for a grocery store. Mr. Roberts and family are excellent citizens and neighbors, and should they decide to move away, the people among whom they have lived so long will be sorry to see them depart and they will be missed hourly for a long time.

Mr. E. B. Marshall, of Lebanon, Tennessee, arrived last Friday evening to visit his relatives in this county. Mr. Marshall's father was a brother of John Marshall, who was a pioneer citizen of this county, being one of the first settlers in the Watclove neighborhood, this county, where he owned a large body of land, numerous slaves and relatives.

Geo. Baker, the Limaburg disciple of Vulcan, was a caller at this office, last Saturday. He says his son, Bud, who went to Los Angeles, California, a few days ago, writes that he has a good job, but does not say what he is doing. James Blyth, who was born and raised in Burlington, and whom young Baker pronounced prince of good fellows, had learned through some of his Boone county relatives that Bud was coming to Los Angeles and was on the lookout for him, and located him in a few hours after his arrival, and took charge of him, and the next day had employment for him at good wages.

He likes the country and a good job will be a strong inducement for him to remain on the western coast. He is a young man who will make friends and retain them anywhere he may go—industrious, honest, moral.

November 8th, 1910.
For Judge Court of Appeals—
JOHN M. LASSING.

For Congress—
ARTHUR B. ROUSE.

For Congress.
The Recorder is authorized to announce Chas. W. Nagel, of Newport, as the Republican candidate for Congress. Election Tuesday, Nov. 8th. Your vote and support respectfully solicited.

John Kelsay, of Hebron, "Improved the looks of County Judge Cason's residence last week by a artistic use of the paint brush.

The revival meeting which will have been in progress with the colored Baptist church three weeks next Friday night has 12 additions.

R. J. Underhill was in town yesterday and reported that his brother, Jerry, who lives in Ohio, is in a Cincinnati hospital, where he was taken after one of his feet was badly injured in a street car accident. He had received none of the particulars.

Last Monday night the town was full of spooks, young and old. The kid element held the boards early in the evening, turning out in full force, putting on some very grotesque make-ups. They called at about every residence in the town, and while the little people enjoyed themselves immensely they afforded considerable fun for the old people. Later in the night the real Halloween started, and the vehicles about town were given a general shake-up, quite a number being left in front of Marco Riddell's store, giving it very much the appearance of a hospital for disabled vehicles. A squad who thought to move Albert Conner's load of tobacco were given a bad fright when he began discharging his pistol from beneath the wagon. The boys ran in every direction, some of them getting hung up in a wire fence and having to call for assistance. But the real surprise and the best joke of the night developed when the time arrived for the half dozen or so country boys engaged in the night's carousal, to go home, and they discovered that someone had turned their horses loose, which caused some of them to walk as much as four miles to reach home.

Very Successful.

The first meeting of the Grant County Farmers' Institute and fair was held at Walnut, Ky., Wednesday, and was highly successful. Fully 5,000 people were in attendance, and the exhibits ranged from a turnip to fine horses. The premiums which aggregated over $400, were given by the business men and citizens of Williamstown and community of W. H. Strange and John G. Blair of the State department, were present and their speeches were well received by the farmers. It is reported that the lecturer pronounced this the greatest county meeting ever held in the State, and in the course of the remarks strongly advanced the organization of a permanent fair association with a view to the approval.

W. R. ROGERS

Appointed County Clerk to Fill the Place of His Brother.

Early Monday morning Judge Cason entered an order in the County Court appointing W. R. Rogers to succeed his brother, the late J. H. Rogers as county clerk. Before the appointee could qualify it was necessary that he have a certificate of qualification, and to obtain this he went yesterday to Owen, where he was examined by the clerk of the Owen circuit court, the presence of Judge J. W. Cammack, Judge Cason's prompt action in appointing the brother of the deceased official to fill the office until an election for County Clerk can be held at the regular November election, 1911, will meet a hearty and unanimous approval on the part of the people of the county. In fact Judge Cason never had another than W. R. Rogers in his mind as a successor to his brother. Mr. Rogers is a quiet but a very capable clerk is elected at the November election to fill the remainder of the term, which will be about six months. The new clerk will enter upon the duties of his office today. His sister, Miss Lizzie, who was doing such efficient work in the office of her brother, J. H. Rogers, will continue in the office as chief deputy. Those who have business here will find Mr. W. R. Rogers a quiet but a very pleasant gentleman. Mr. Rogers is 37 years of age.

Hon. J. G. Tomlin, of Walton, Boone County, is a candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals from the 6th Appellate District. He was nominated by acclamation by the Republican Convention at Mayfield, Sept. 20th, and expects to visit every county before the election Nov. 8th, but it is doubtful if he will see a majority of the people. He therefore requests you to remember him when you go to the polls Nov. 8th. Mr. Tomlin is a native of Grant County, Ky., and he was reared on the farm 48 years ago. His ambitious temperament, coupled with the most industrious habits and strict morality has not only won him a high place in the public esteem, but every trust he has been called upon to fill he has discharged with honor and credit. He is a fine student of the law and having a splendid analytical mind, he would make an ideal supreme judge, and his many friends prevailed upon him to make the race. He believes in right and justice prevailing without regard to individuals, prejudice, or favoritism, and admits his case to the people with these principles as the basis for their support, and asks to be remembered at the polls Nov. 8th.

Was Getting Even.

A man with a painful expression of countenance sat on a goodly box, "Are you ill?" some one asked. "No." "Have you lost anything?" "Never had anything to lose." "What's the matter, then?" "I'm sitting on a wasp." "Why don't you get up?" "Well, that was my first impulse, but I got to thinking that I was was hurtin' the wasp as badly as he was hurtin' me and concluded to sit here a while."

The Care of Colts.

The colt should have a roomy box stall. If you have two colts keep them together when the mares are at work, as there is no animal that likes company better than a colt, says a writer in American Cultivator. As they get older see that they have plenty of good clover hay and bright oats to eat. It is well to have a little pasture near the barn and let them into this when the mares are at work. Have this fenced with good, woven wire, high enough so they cannot get their heads over it. The pasture should be arranged so they can run into the barn to get away from the flies. Leave the cover to the oats box open, so they can help themselves. Keep a pail of water in the stall where they can reach it. After a little you can mix skim milk; but let them have what water they want at all times. Some colts will take skim milk at once, but be careful and not give them too much to commence with, say two quarts at first, and as they get accustomed to it you can give them five or six quarts a day. This you can feed all winter, and they will go on to pasture in the spring in fine shape. If they are eating oats and drinking milk at weaning time there will be no setback, which always occurs if they are not.

When they are about a year year old and on the pasture, gradually wean them from the oats and milk, and they get nothing but pasture until fall, when they are again fed grain and hay.

We always stable all of our colts at night, but they have a roomy yard or field to run in in the day time, so that they get plenty of exercise.

We always break our colts to harness before they are three years old. Get them used to the harness before spring work begins. Work them only half a day to commence with, and see that their collars and harness fit them well.

When the weather gets warm clip your colts. By so doing you may avoid sore shoulders. If a colt gets a sore shoulder, let him rest a few days and heal it up. If you continue to work him and the sore keeps getting worse, you may have a shoulder that will always bother you when he is put to hard work.

We aim to sell all of our geldings before they are seven years old. When you intend to sell your horses see that they are in proper shape. They should be fat, as that is what the market demands. Feed them on good wholesome food; corn can be fed to quite an extent at this time, with bran and a little oil meal.

By breeding the right horses, those with weight and quality, I know of no class of stock that will bring better returns for our high priced feeds (considering the amount of labor involved) than good draft horses.—Ex.

Benefits of Good Silo.

Missouri state experiment station summarizes the value of the silo as follows:

1. Silage keeps young stock thrifty, and growing all winter.

2. It produces fat beef more cheaply than does dry feed.

3. It enables cows to produce milk and butter more economically.

4. Silage is more conveniently handled than dry fodder.

5. The silo prevents waste of corn stalks in the manure when silage is fed.

6. The silo will make profitable food of stuff that would not otherwise be eaten.

7. It enables the farmer to preserve food which matures at a rainy time of the year, when drying would be next to impossible.

8. It is the most economical method of supplying food for the stock during the hot, dry periods in summer, when the pasture is short.

Prospects are that the new school building at Burlington will not be occupied by the High School before next spring. The work has progressed very satisfactorily since the brick mason began, but the weather is liable to cause a suspension of operations at any time now. So far the class of work done on the building has been very satisfactory.

First Snow of the Season.

Snow fell rapidly at intervals, last Friday, in this part of the county, and at places about dark it came down for some time in regular midwinter fashion. Whom Will the Failure of the Pool Help?

Various opinions are being handed out these days as to the possible effect of the failure of the pool. The most striking one so far observed is that of Mr. J. F. Ramsey, a bank supervisor under Dr. Ben L. Breyer, Secretary of State. The Courier-Journal quotes Mr. Ramsey as saying that while the growers of Burley tobacco may be injured by the failure of the pool, that it will have the effect of helping business in Central Kentucky. Mr. Ramsey says that the breaking up of the pool will help business generally. He reasons that the banks will have money to loan to new enterprises, and that companies which have not been able in the last two years to get any money with which to do business will now be able to borrow. The Courier-Journal's statement continues: "The tobacco growers who are figuring on buying automobiles and other luxuries will have to do without these things, but they will get more money for their tobacco, and the pool has failed, the general business of the country will be helped. Also the following: 'While some of the tobacco growers will not have much money for a while, the general business of the country will be helped. The failure in the Burley District will be improved.'"

We have no reason at all to doubt Mr. Ramsey's general knowledge of banking business or even his general understanding of economics, but we greatly fear he has imbibed too heartily from the Republican "still house," and that his notions of prosperity never go beyond the "privileged classes." What can be the meaning of a statement like this: "the growers of burley tobacco may be injured by the failure of the pool, but it will have the effect of helping business in Central Kentucky?"

Taking it for granted that the failure of the pool will cause the price of tobacco to go gradually downward year by year, (and we believe this will be the inevitable result), and knowing, as everyone knows, that tobacco is the principal product of Central Kentucky, how is the failure of the pool to help our business? If, as he says, "growers of burley tobacco may be injured," by the low price of tobacco, in what way can this injury be made up? By loaning money to "new enterprises"? By putting banks in a shape to loan money to companies which have been shy the last two years? What about that vague notion entertained by "theorists" even of this day, do the all laws and government and prosperity should be made for the greatest number? Will it help the business of the country generally to take the money from the people and give it to "new enterprises"? Doesn't an automobile count just as much in the hands of a farmer as it counts in the hands of the manufacturer? And where is this money to come from anyway? The banks do not create wealth. They are depositaries. In Central Kentucky the farmers are the creators of wealth. Will the increase come if the creators stop creating? True, it will ease up everybody in Central Kentucky, but the farmers. It will turn all their products into ready cash; it will give speculators a large field for operation; it will put a reasonable balance in every bank, but it will turn all the profits into the coffers of the "system" and the "criminal" riches of this is Mr. Ramsey's notion of prosperity, then he is right in his prognostications.

We do not blame Mr. Ramsey for entertaining this opinion since a majority of the farmers seemingly have similar notions.—Owen County News-Herald.

Sheep Will Be Higher.

The Indiana Farmer has lately called attention to the fact that the drought of this season on the western ranges has compelled the sale of large drafts from the flocks of that region, and as a result of this everything points to a shortage of sheep and mutton next year. Without forage to carry them through the coming winter there was nothing range flockmen could do but to dump great numbers on the market at any price the packers would pay. And so this will reduce the flocks greatly for next year.

Another cause of this limitation is the restriction of the range through occupation and fencing by farmers, who are grain growers, and not live stock raisers. The tremendous rush of these settlers upon the range within the last three years, and especially within the last 12 months, is hard to realize. It is not alone the area actually inclosed by these settlers, but the breaking up thereby of vast regions of grazing lands into such small sections that they are no longer available to stockmen for grazing their flocks, which is one of the main reasons why the sheep supplies of the western range country are being more closely marketed this year than ever before in the history of the trade.

The western range country has heretofore been the chief source of sheep market supplies, but unless the farmers of the corn belt begin at once to raise many more sheep than they have ever done before there will be a great scarcity of both mutton and wool before long in this country.

Moreover, there is a world short age of livestock of all kinds. All Europe is short of sheep, and even Australia's supply is declining with rapidity. The same general cause that exist in this country are operating in other countries also. Populations are growing rapidly everywhere, while grazing areas are being reduced, as pasture land is turned to production of cereals sheep raising declines.

The same causes have operated in bringing about a shortage of cattle on the ranges for next year.—Indiana Farmer.

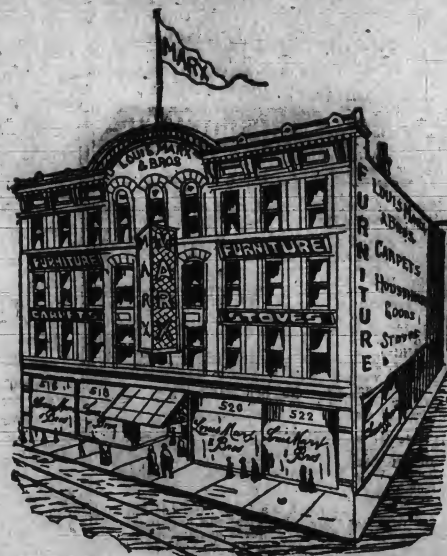

GALLATIN COUNTY, (Warsaw Leader.)

The long looked for street improvements have begun. The spiker and roller started Monday morning on the hill in front of the Court House in the presence of a large crowd of business men who are vitally interested in the upbuilding of Warsaw. The street was first thoroughly spiked by the big engine, then the scraper was attached and the street rounded up in the center and thoroughly rolled with the big ten ton roller. The work done so far shows that when the work is finished Warsaw's streets will be materially improved.

Eighty guests celebrated the Golden Wedding of Esq. E. H. McNelly and wife at their home on Napoleon Ridge, last Tuesday, the eighteenth. It was one of the most beautiful days of the season and the golden glory of the October sun was in true keeping with the occasion. On a similar day fifty years ago Mr. McNelly and Miss Mary Clements united in the bonds of holy wedlock at the home of the bride on the Ohio, a short distance above Jackson's landing. There were born to this union eleven children, ten of whom are living. Twelve grandchildren also bless their declining years. Three long tables were spread in the yard, decorated with cypressanthe-mums and other autumn flowers and loaded with everything that was pleasing to the appetite. After taking their places at the table, the guests sang the Doxology after which Rev. McMullan gave thanks for the blessings which have come to this good family. The bride and groom were the recipients of many very useful presents. The guests took their departure late in the afternoon, wishing Mr. and Mrs. McNelly many more years of united happiness and feeling that it was good to have been with these splendid people on this, their Golden Wedding day.

On Monday Mr. Isaac Scott sold his Woodford county farm to E. R. Fishback, of Versailles, at $125 an acre. Two years ago Mr. Scott bought the place at $11 an acre and had rotted $600 from a railroad for a right of way thru the place. Mr. Scott will buy a Mercer county farm. This certainly doesn't look as if it was going down. The deal was made through: Rue & Curry.—Harrods-burg Herald.

Just a tribute from one who feels we have lost a very dear friend in the death of Miss Beale Berkshire, which occurred October 26th, 1910. She was a kind and loving friend, a loving and devoted daughter, her first thoughts being always for her mother, whom she had hoped to be able to care for in her declining years, but God willed otherwise, and she bore her long illness and great suffering with wonderful patience, always bright and cheerful, hoping soon to be well, for she had much to live for, and life to her seemed very bright. She loved her many friends, who have remembered her so kindly, every day some one sending some little token, keeping her heart warm, and making the days and nights of pain seem less dreary; but when the call came she was ready and willing to go, and fell asleep as a little child peacefully to rest. Legislature Somewhat in Doubt As to Majority.

DEMOCRATIC GAINS DECISIVE

Republicans Claim Balance of State Ticket and the Legislature—Hamilton County Goes Republican By Small Majority.

Columbus—Gov. Harmon has swept Ohio by at least 50,000 plurality. In the proud moment of victory the governor announces that his election is to be regarded not as a personal victory, but a triumph for good government. This was his principal argument to his audiences every day.

While the returns are meager on other offices, there are enough to determining the governorship most decisively. At midnight his opponent, Mr. Harding, at his Marion home, while refusing to make a statement, admitted that the outlook was discouraging. The returns from the rural districts were showing a steady and impressive trend toward his rival, and the expected slump of the cities showed only in Cincinnati.

Gov. Harmon made a wonderful race in Cleveland and in Dayton. Here Congressman M. Cox won a notable victory, carrying the National Soldiers' home and rolling up a majority of over 10,000 in the Third district. In this city, where it was thought Gov. Harmon would lose on account of the street car strike, he appears to have triumphed and turned the tables on his adversaries, who made political capital of it. In Toledo, where ex-President Roosevelt launched his bolt, Gov. Harmon increased his plurality of 1908.

It was demonstrated that when Roosevelt spoke there was a

Born—On the 7th inst. to A. B. Renner and wife, an eight and one-half pound girl.

Winter has begun sending out specimens of the weather that may be expected later on.

Mrs. F. M. Peddicord, of Bracken county, is the guest of Dr. F. L. Peddicord, and wife.

Thanksgiving will come on the 24th of this month, which is the last Thursday in the month.

The weather the past week has been exactly what the corn needed to prepare it for the crib.

The Boone Library Association will meet on Friday evening of this week with Mrs. Dudley House.

Two of the twenty-eight or twenty-nine snows booked for this winter have come and gone.

The base ball season has closed and the election is over, consequently the country is without excitement.

The small grain sowed this fall got a good start for the winter, and should be in good condition next spring.

Benjamin Crisler, of McVine, was among the visitors to Burlington, last Saturday. He declares that he is growing poorer day by day.

Jesse Kirkpatrick and his force of hands are making fine progress with the Bullittsville Christian church building. It is now under roof.

New metal is being put on the Burlington and Florence pike in many places where the heavy rains of a few weeks ago washed the road badly.

Robert Wilson, of Rabbit Hash, struck Burlington early Saturday morning, to meet a drove of stock cattle he was having brought out from the city by R. O. Ryle, of Beech Grove.

Dogs have been playing havoc with sheep in Hebron neighborhood in the last two weeks. Eliza Harper's flock was about cleaned out—killed and is crippled. The dogs have not been discovered.

Jas. Snyder, of Woolper Heights, was in Burlington, last Friday. Mr. Snyder is a road overseer in Petersburg precinct, and is doing considerable work on that part of the Woolper pike in his district, trying to reclaim a portion of it that is in very bad condition.

Wm. Adams, of Harrison county, candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, was in Burlington, last Monday, forming the acquaintance of the Boone county Democrats. Mr. Adams made a good impression on those whom he met while in the county.

The Rabbit Hash people, and especially ferryman Ben Wilson, are delighted with the new gasoline ferry boat which has been installed there. It has two 12-horse power engines, one on either side, and makes the work of ferrying so easy that it is now play. The boat is as easy to handle as a shift.

The old, old story, told times without number, and repeated over and over again for the last 36 years, but it is always a welcome story to those in search of health—There is nothing in the world that cures a cough and colds as quickly as Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Sold by all dealers.

Thomas Corbin, of Erlanger neighborhood, called over last Saturday and placed an order for bills advertising a sale for the 22d inst. the advertisement for which appears in another column. Mr. Corbin has rented a fine 30-acre farm near Hamilton, Ohio, to which he will move soon after his sale. Mr. Corbin has a good thing in Ohio, and with ordinary luck is bound to prosper in the Buckeye State.

There is a large number of tobacco owners engaged in the cultivation of tobacco whose time and labor could be more profitably employed if they were turned to raising of livestock and the improvement of their land, leaving the cultivation of tobacco to those who rent land and have to engage in the cultivation of tobacco which can be converted into money without delay. If the land owning element will eliminate itself from the cultivation of tobacco, the production will be reduced to an amount that will always demand a good price, and thus the tobacco problem will be solved to the profit of all. Greed for money at the expense of the fine and fertile land in Kentucky is responsible for the present tobacco conditions, and the exhausted state of the soil in many places demands that the production be cut down, and a move to reclaim the land be put on foot.

Many school children suffer from constipation, which is often the cause of seeming stupidity at lessons. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets are an ideal medicine to give a child, for they not only cure the constipation, but also the indigestion and headache which often accompany it.

The annihilation of the distillery at Petersburg is the sixth this year has put out of existence in this part of the country in the last few years.

William Kirkpatrick took a nice drive of about 10 miles daily to the distillery at Petersburg, Va.,
and it has never disappointed
him. Sold by all dealers.

Croup is most prevalent during the dry cold weather of the early winter months. Parents of young children should be prepared for it. All that is needed is a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many mothers are nervous without it in their homes
and it has never disappointed them. Sold by all dealers.

Considerable tobacco has been stripped, and those who have sold will deliver the weed at the earliest moment possible, as $11 per hundred in winter order is considered equal to fifteen dollars per hundred after redrying.

DEMOCRATIC LANDSLIDE

Hit the State of Kentucky and Congressmen Re-elected.

BEN JOHNSON RUNS FINE RACE

Caleb Powers Won Spectacular Race
In Eleventh District—Langley Elected Over Byrd.

Frankfort, Ky.—The tail-end of the Democratic landslide struck Kentucky as the returns indicate that the Democrats were able to redeem but one congressional district that has been Republican for a number of years, and may have lost an appellate judge. The hue-of the Kentucky delegation in congress at the next session will be:

Second District—H. O. Stanley, Dem., Henderson.
Third District—R. Y. Thomas, Dem., Ellettsburg.
Fourth District—Ben Johnson, Dem., Bardonia.
Fifth District—Swager Shirley, Dem., Louisville.
Sixth District—A. B. Rouse, Dem., Burlington.
Seventh District—J. C. Cantrill, Dem., Georgetown.
Eighth District—Harvey Helm, Dem., Stanford.
Ninth District—W. J. Field, Dem., Grayson.
Tenth District—John Langley, Rep., Prestonburg.
Eleventh District—Caleb Powers, Rep., Barbourville.

DEMOCRATS MAKE GAINS.

Results as Shown in the Districts Throughout Kentucky.

Frankfort, Ky.—Democrats scored sweeping victories all over Kentucky at Tuesday's election.

The net result of the election was nine Democratic congressmen out of 11, and the election of all four of the Democratic candidates for the court of appeals.

After the battle of ballots it was shown that the Democrats had made a gain of one congressman, W. J. Fields, in the Ninth district, who made a remarkable race against Congressman J. B. Bennett, the Republican opponent.

In the First district Congressman Ollie M. James, Democrat, was re-elected by an old-time majority, his only opponent being a Socialist.

The Second district, by an increased majority, returned to Congress A. O. Stanley, of Henderson.

One of the surprising races was that made by Congressman R. Y. Thomas, Jr., in the Third district, who defeated W. H. Jones, his Republican opponent, by 1,224 majority.

The most remarkable race ran in the state was made by Congressman Ben Johnson, in the Fourth district, who carried every county against Dr. Gaddie, Republican, receiving an unprecedented majority of over 6,000.

In the Fifth district Congressman Swager Shirley, Democrat, goes back to Congress, having defeated his Republican opponent, Judge Wheeler McGee, by a majority of nearly 4,000.

The Seventh district, after one of the hardest fights in the state, returns to congress J. Campbell Cantrill, Democrat, by about 3,000 majority over M. C. Rankin, Republican.

Harvey Helm, Democrat, made a runaway race in the Eighth district, easily defeating Hugh Miller, Republican.

In the Tenth district A. Floyd Byrd, Democrat, made a gallant fight against great odds, but was unable to overcome the big lead of J. W. Langley, Republican, who is sent back to the next congress.

While the Eleventh district was conceded to Caleb Powers, Republican, the Republican majority was greatly reduced by Eliza Bertram, the Democratic candidate, who ran a most surprising race in this stronghold of Republicanism.

The Democrats made a clean sweep of the four appellate districts in which elections were held for judge of the court of appeals.

Judge Shackelford Miller won over R. W. Bingham, Republican, in the Fourth, or Louisville, district by a majority of about 1,500.

In the Sixth district Judge John M. Lansing ran a remarkable race, easily defeating Judge Tomlin, Republican, by about 5,500 votes.

FIRST DISTRICT.

Paducah.—With scarcely any returns in from the First Congressional district, with the exception of Paducah, Ollie James, Democrat, is estimated to be elected by 6,000 majority over C. L. Horsey, the Socialist nominee. Judge T. J. Nunn, Democrat, of Madisonville, had no opposition for the appellate court. The vote was very light. In Paducah the Democrats elected the aldermanic and councilmen, and the Republican party lost the school board.

Second District.—H. O. Stanley, Democrat, of Henderson, was re-elected by a large majority.

Third District.—R. Y. Thomas, Jr., Democrat, of Ellettsburg, was re-elected by a large majority.

Fourth District.—Ben Johnson, Democrat, of Bardonia, was re-elected by a large majority.

The Leader 78 Pike St., Near Russell
COVINGTON, KY.

made a runaway race for re-election as judge of the Court of Appeals over Judge J. Allen Dean, Republican, of Owensboro. The majorities by counties follow:

Counties.	Settle.	Dean.
Allen	271	271
Breckenridge	170	170
Butler	822	822
Davies	1495	1495
Edmonson	800	800
Grayson	200	200
Hancock	17	17
Henderson	1200	1200
McLean	525	525
Logan	650	650
Munroe	700	700
Meade	4	4
Ohio	250	250
Simpson	525	525
Todd	4	4
Warren	600	600
Total	5636	2093
Settle's majority, 3543.

EIGHTH DISTRICT.

Shelbyville.—Returns received here indicate the following majorities for Harvey Helm, Democrat, in the Eighth Congressional district:

Shelby	784
Spencer	425
Anderson	500
Jessamine	425
Mercer	350
Boyle	350
Lincoln	500

Rockcastle went Republican by 200; Garrard by 26 and Madison by 150. This makes Helm's estimated majority in the district 2,824.

NINTH DISTRICT.

Covington.—John M. Lansing, Democratic candidate for judge of the court of appeals from the Sixth appellate district, estimated his majority over Judge J. G. Tomlin, Republican, at 5,500. He said practically reliable reports from the Ninth Congressional district indicate that W. J. Fields, Democrat, had defeated J. B. Bennett, Republican incumbent, for congress by a majority of about 1,000.

TENTH DISTRICT.

Mt. Sterling.—Estimated returns received at Republican headquarters here indicate the election of John W. Langley, Republican incumbent, for congress over A. Floyd Byrd, Democrat, by over 1,000. Byrd ran a remarkable race and cut down the Republican majority over one-half.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT.

London.—The Eleventh Congressional district, true to its tradition, gave Caleb Powers, the Republican nominee for congress, a majority of 8,768 over State Senator Ezra S. Beam, the Democratic nominee. Notwithstanding the fact that hundreds of Republicans voted for the Democratic nominee and hundreds of others stayed away from the polls, the Democrats were unable to wipe out the huge Republican majority which sometimes amounts to 22,000.

In the appellate judge race in the Fourth district between Shackelford Miller, Dem., and R. W. Bingham, Fusion, is close, both sides claiming victory. It may require the official count to decide the contest.

Judge Warren B. Settle, Jr., Dem., Bowling Green, is re-elected appellate judge in the Second district by 4,000. Judge J. T. Nunn, Dem., Marion, is re-elected in the First, without opposition.

There was a woeful lack of interest taken in the election and the smallest vote in years seems to have been cast. The win for Judge Settle is taken as a victory for the "non-partisan bench" idea, as many Republicans advised against opposition to him, as he had never considered politics on the bench. He reversed the judgment in the Caleb Powers cases, giving him re-trials.

There was never any doubt about Congressman Shirley's re-election, as he is regarded the leader of the Kentucky delegation and is very popular personally.

The serious charges made against Congressman Campbell Cantrill in the Seventh District and the bitter opposition to him by the Burley Tobacco organization gave the independent voters hope that M. C. Rankin, the Republican candidate, would win. In the closing days of the campaign the Republicans deserted Rankin because he put no enthusiasm into the campaign and did not take the stump.

Rankin may have something to say later about the conduct of his campaign. Rankin carried three counties in the district—something wonderful. Cantrill only polled about 60 per cent of the Democratic vote and Rankin 75 per cent of the Republican vote.

Ill With Typhoid.

Nominee Fields in the Ninth district was ill with typhoid fever during the greater part of the campaign, but there was widespread opposition to the incumbent and Fields won.

Langley probably won because of his splendid organization. He kept his men with every man in his district.

The Ladies' Aid Society met at Mrs. Addie Scott's, Thursday evening. Refreshments were served and an enjoyable and profitable evening was spent.
We made our first trip on the new ferry boat, one day last week and found her a thing of beauty and a joy forever. If you want to cross the river with a team, safely and quickly, come to Rabbit Hole.
The government surveyors were in this vicinity several days last week looking over ground for a location for a lock and dam. It is highly probable that the lock will be built in front of Riverview, as they found the most suitable bottom here for the work of any place they sounded. Should the lock be built here, Riverview will become a temporary town of about 500 inhabitants.
David S. Ryle, who lives with his brother here, had quite an adventure last week. While going up the hill back of Riverview, and on passing by an old oak stump, he espied the top of an iron kettle just even with the top of the ground. Visions of buried treasures floated through his mind and felling on his knees he soon had the kettle out of the ground, raising the heavy iron lid. He found it was filled to the brim with gold pieces of $20 denomination. Being too heavy for him to carry, he was calling loudly for his brother to come and help carry it to the house. His brother quickly went to his aid and it was some time before he aroused him from the sound sleep he had fallen into after eating a whole mince pie for supper.

Saves an Iowa Man's Life.
The very grave seemed to yawn before Robert Madsen, of West Burlington, Iowa, when, after seven weeks in the hospital, four of the best physicians gave him up. Then was shown the marvelous curative power of Electric Bitters. For, after eight months of frightful suffering from liver trouble, he was cured. He is now able to help himself from other remedies or doctors, five bottles of this matchless medicine completely cured him. Stomach, Liver or Kidney troubles and never disappoints. Only one at Bantler's drug store Erlanger.

Letter From Colorado.

New Castle Colo., Nov. 8th.
Dear Sir: I enclose money order for $1.00 for the Recorder. I don't know how much is behind on our subscription but please send it along and we will remit the balance soon. Send the paper to me at New Castle. We have moved to this place, and I don't like it at all. It is like living next door to purgatory. There are two mining mountains, one on which is situated the old Vulcan mine (coal), where so many men lost their lives years ago, on account of an explosion. The mine is still running. One can see the smoke coming up in several places, and work is now going on in that direction. The other of the bodies were never recovered. That is just across the Grande river in front of us. South and on the west, just as we are, is another mountain that has been on fire for 15 years. The ground is so hot one can not walk over it in places. There are diagonal slips from top to bottom in several places, where the mountain has settled. It is a strange, and sight to confront a person every time he looks out, and I don't like it.

About four miles away, west, is another mining mountain that the Indians told the first settlers here, in 1855, about, and it had been on fire for years, then, supposed to be coal in them that is the cause. All these ranges around us are very high, and many of the peaks are conical in shape, looks like it may be volcanic to me.

John is at work about 15 miles from town in the fine timber, running a sawmill. He is over ten thousand feet high. Has built him a house up there where all large wild game and birds are plentiful. He has a good camp, and to camp with him awhile. Wish some of our Ky. friends could be with us. If you wish me to do so, will let you know about this part of the world, when I have had time to explore it. We moved this week. Craig and family still at Carbonate.

Yours Truly, S. E. Baldon.

The tremendous slump in the Republican majority in the 11th district is more humiliating to Caleb Powers than a defeat was to any of the other candidates for Congress in Kentucky.

If the Democrats do not go up in the air in organizing Congress and after that if they keep their heads low, they may name the next occupant of the White House.

Governor Harmon, of Ohio, Governor-elect Dix, of New York, Fess, of Massachusetts and Wilson, of New Jersey, are expected to attend the conference of Governors to be held at Frankfort, this State.

Quite a number of the taxpayers from the outlying precincts in the county have called at the Recorder's office to see the house in the last few days to square themselves with the State revenue department.

County Clerk W. R. Rogers has been quite ill at his home near Walton for several days. Pneumonia was feared for a few days.

A Distressing Accident.

A distressing accident that involved G. G. Hughes and wife and their 14 year old daughter, occurred shortly after dark last Sunday. They were going out to see Miss Amelia Hughes, who is quite ill, and just after they had crossed the creek at the foot of the W. J. Rice hill, the horse attached to their buggy scared and whirled around throwing Mr. Hughes and his daughter into the wheels of the vehicle passing over her breast, injuring her quite seriously, while Mr. Hughes received an ugly scalp wound. The little girl was unconscious for some time. Mrs. Hughes remained in the buggy until the top of the hill at 4. M. The horse was reached, when she jumped out, and was thrown down, and an ugly gash cut in her head. The horse ran home where it was found in the creek at the foot of the hill. The vehicle having been injured was unable to speak. Ralph Cresson who was coming into town saw the runaway horse having happened and he went back and found the unfortunate people, whom he assisted home. Little Margaret began having her orrises shortly after the accident, and she is now under the care of Dr. Peddicord and a professional nurse, and making good about her condition is manifested by all.

The tumble in the prices of foodstuffs, which began a week or more ago, is now reported as practically uniform in all parts of the country. This is especially true of meats, with the single exception of bacon, which continues high. As packers explain, the hogs have been too well fed on corn and come to the market too fat to make bacon. Vegetables are beginning to slide downward, and it is estimated that the market basket is on the average nearly 10 per cent lower than it was a few months ago. In the Cincinnati market the best cuts of pork are now 15 cents wholesale, and dressed beef ranges about 10 cents a pound. These are the lowest prices in a year or more. General Michael Ryan, of the Cincinnati Abattoir Company declares that the price of meats here will probably drop about 2 cents more on the pound, wholesale, which will place them on the same level with the prices which continue throughout the winter.

The Democratic Lieutenant Governor-elect, Pomerene, of Ohio, has declared himself a candidate for United States Senator at the election to be held by the legislature of that State at its next session. Mr. Pomerene's haste in the matter shows that he belongs to a class of persons who are saturated with political ambition. The man who, while yet an officer elect, declares himself a candidate for United States Senator, is filled during the term to which his people has called him to serve them, is imbued with an ambition to be a public servant, as he looks on the time looking out "for something better." The Recorder does not expect Mr. Pomerene to recant because of this criticism.

Additional Walton news.
Mrs. A. B. Tompkins and daughter, Miss Isabel, spent yesterday in the city.
J. T. Stephenson, of near Florence, spent part of the week here with his relatives.
A. Warth spent part of the past week at his old home in Scott county and at Georgetown.
Mrs. Mary Hyatt and daughter, Mrs. Tina Hume, of near Hume, were visitors here Tuesday.
R. C. Seacrest, of near Erlanger, spent part of the week here and on his farm in Grant county.
Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Miller of Landing, spent Sunday here with their brother John C. Miller and family.

The public school has been dismissed since last week on account of the heating system of the building being unfinanced, and the cold weather made it impossible for the school to be comfortably conducted.

M. Edwards spent the first of the week in Cincinnati with her sister, Miss Alicia Neumeister, who has been in a hospital since the past couple of weeks undergoing treatment. Miss Neumeister underwent a surgical operation and it was very successful in removing the cause of her ailment, and we are glad to note that she is recovering rapidly and was able to accompany her sister home.

Governor Harmon, of Ohio, Governor-elect Dix, of New York, Fess, of Massachusetts and Wilson, of New Jersey, are expected to attend the conference of Governors to be held at Frankfort, this State.

Quite a number of the taxpayers from the outlying precincts in the county have called at the Recorder's office to see the house in the last few days to square themselves with the State revenue department.

County Clerk W. R. Rogers has been quite ill at his home near Walton for several days. Pneumonia was feared for a few days.

SYNOPSIS.

Capt. Nathaniel Plum, of the sloop Typhoon, lands secretly on Beaver Island, stronghold of the Mormons. He is suddenly confronted by Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and a member of the Mormon council, who tells him that he is expected. Price ignores Nat's protestations that he has got the wrong man, and demands that Plum's visit to the island be a demand for settlement from the king, demanding for the fee of his ship some time previously, supposedly by Mormons. Casey, the mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if Nat does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat to the kitchen, to the king's home, and through a winding path, to a young woman who disappears in the darkness, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to the island is to demand settlement from the king, demanding for the fee of his ship some time previously, supposedly by Mormons. Casey, the mate, has been left in charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if Nat does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nat to the kitchen, to the king's home, and through a winding path, to a young woman who disappears in the darkness, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Plum's visit to the island is to demand settlement from the king, demanding for the fee of his ship some time previously, supposedly by Mormons.

He would go to the councilor's. Having once decided, Nathaniel turned in the direction of the town, avoiding the use of the path which he and Obadiah had taken, but following in the forest near enough to use it as a guide. He was confident that Arbor Croche and his sheriffs were confining their man hunt to the swamp, but in spite of this he held his eyes wide open, caution, stopping to listen now and then, with one hand always near his pistol. A quiet gloom filled the forest and by the tree tops he marked the going down of the sun, Nathaniel's ears ached with their strain of listening for the rumbling roar that would tell of Casey's attack on St. James.

Suddenly he heard a crackling in the underbrush ahead of him, a sound that came not from the strain of listening for the rumbling roar and in a moment he had dodged into concealment of the huge roots of an overhanging tree, drawn pistol in hand. Whatever object was approaching came slowly, as if hesitating at each step, a cautious, stealthy advance, it struck Nathaniel, as he cocked his weapon. Directly in front of him, half a stone's throw away, was a dense growth of hazel and he could see the tops of the slender bushes swaying. Twice the movement ceased and the second time there came a crashing of a bush and a faint cry. For many minutes after that there was absolute silence. Was it the cry of an animal that he had heard—or of a man? In either case the creature who made it had fallen in the thicket and was lying there as still as if dead. For a quarter of an hour Nathaniel waited and listened. He could no longer see the movement of bushes in the gathering night gloom of the forest but his ears were strained to catch the slightest sound from the direction of the mysterious thing that lay within less than a dozen rods of him. Slowly he drew himself out from the shelter of the roots and advanced step by step. Half way to the thicket a wick cracked loudly under his foot and as the sound startled the dead quiet of the forest, with pistol-shot clearness there came another cry from the dense hazel, a cry which was neither that of man nor animal but of a woman; and with an answering shout Nathaniel sprang forward to meet her in the edge of the thicket of the white face and outstretched arms of Marion. The girl was swaying on her feet. In her face there was a pallor that even in his instant's glance sent a chill of horror through the veins of his arms and as she staggered toward him, half falling, her lips weakly forming his name Nathaniel leaped to her and caught her close in his arms. To that moment something seemed to burst within him and flood his veins with fire. Closer he held the girl, and never as knew that she was becoming in his arms. Her head fell upon his breast, his face was crushed in her hair, he felt her throbbing and something against him and his lips quivered with the words that were bursting for freedom in his soul. But first there came the girl's own whispered breath—"Nell—where is Nell?"

"He is gone from the island!" Her head became a dead weight now and so he kept her the ground with her head still upon his breast.

her head still upon his breast, her eyes closed, her arms fallen to her side. And as Nathaniel looked into her face from which all life seemed to have fled he forgot everything but the joy of this moment—forgot all in life but this woman against his breast. He kissed her soft mouth and the closed eyes until the eyes themselves opened again and gazed at him in a startled, half understanding way, until he drew his head far back with the shame of what he had dared to do flaming in his face.

And as for another moment he held her thus, feeling the quivering life returning in her, there came to him through that vast forest stillness the distant deep-toned thunder of a great gun.

"That's Casey!" he whispered close down to the girl's face. His voice was almost sobbing in its happiness. "That's Casey—firing on St. James!"

CHAPTER VII.

The Hour of Vengeance.

For perhaps 20 seconds after the last echoes of the gun had rolled through the forest the girl lay passive in Nathaniel's arms, so close that he could feel her heart beating against his own and her breath sweeping his face. Then there came a pressure against his breast, a gentle resistance of Marion's half-conscious form, and when she had awakened from her partial swoon he was holding her in the crook of his arm. It had all passed quickly, the girl had risen against him only so long as he might have held her down beneath and yet there had been all of a lifetime in it for Nathaniel Plum, a cycle of joy that he knew would remain with him forever. But there was something bitter-sweet in the thought that she was conscious of what he had done, something of humiliation and self-guiltiness, and still not enough of the first to make him regret that he had kissed her, that he had kissed her mouth and her eyes. He loved her, and he was glad that in those passing moments he had betrayed himself. For the first time he noticed that her face was scratched and that the sleeves of her thin waist were torn to shreds; and as she drew away from him, steadying herself with a hand on his arm, his lips were parched of words, and yet he leaned to her eagerly, everything that he would have said burning in the love of his eyes. Still irresolute as to her fate, the girl smiled at him, and in that smile, there was gentle accusation, the sweetness of forgiveness, and measureless gratitude, and it was yet light enough for him to see that with these there had come also a flush into her cheeks and a dawning glow into her eyes.

"Nell has escaped!" she breathed. "And you?"

"I was going back to you, Marion!" He spoke the words hardly above a whisper. The beautiful eyes so close to him drew his secret from him before he had thought. "I am going to take you from the island!"

With his words there came again that sound of a great gun rolling from the direction of St. James. With a frightened cry the girl staggered to her feet, and as she stood swaying unsteadily, her arms half reached to him, Nathaniel saw only mortal dread in the whiteness of her face.

"Why didn't you go? Why didn't you go with Nell?" she moaned. Her breath was coming in sobbing catches. "Your ship is at—St. James!"

"Yes, my ship is at St. James, Marion!" His voice was tremulous with triumph, with gladness, with a tenderness which he could not control. He put an arm half round her waist to support her trembling form and to his joy she did not seek to draw away from him. His hand was buried in the richness of her loose hair. He bent until his lips touched her silken tresses. "Nell has told me everything—about you," he added softly. "My ship is bombarding St. James, and I am going to take you from the island!"

Not until then did Marion free herself from his arm and then so gently that when she stood facing him he felt no reproach. No longer did shame send a flush into his face. He had spoken his love, though not in words, and he knew that the girl understood him. It did not occur to him in these moments that he had known this girl for only a few hours, that until now a word had never passed between them. He was conscious only that he had loved her from the time he saw her through the king's window, that he had risked his life for her, and that she knew why he had leaped into the arena at the whipping-post.

The words she spoke now came like a dash of cold water in his face. "Your ship is not bombarding St. James, Captain Plum!" she exclaimed. Darkness hid the terror in her face, but he could hear the tremble of it in her voice. "The Typhoon has been captured by the Mormons and those guns are—guns, of triumph—and not—" She caught her breath in a convulsive sob. "I want you to go—I want you to go—with Nell!" she pleaded.

"So Casey is taken!" He spoke slowly, as if he had not heard her last words. For a moment he stood silent, and as silently the girl stood and watched him. She guessed the despair that was raging in his heart, but when he spoke to her she could detect none of it, in his voice.

"Casey is a fool," he said, unconsciously repeating Obadiah's words. "Marion, will you come with me? Will you leave the island—and join your brother?"

The hope that had risen in his heart was once again as Marion drew further away from him.

"You must go alone," she replied.

With a powerful effort she steadied her voice. "Tell Nell that I have been condemned to death. Tell him that—if he loves me—he will not return to the island."

"And if?" From the distance she saw his arms stretched like shadows toward her.

"And you—?" Her voice was low, so low that he could hardly hear the words she spoke, but its sweetness thrilled him.

"And you—if you love me—will do nothing for me. Go to Nell. Save his life for me."

She had come to him through the gloom, and in the luster of the eyes that were turned up to him Nathaniel saw again the power that swayed his soul.

"You will go?"

"I will save your brother—if I can!"

"You can save him!" she breathed, in an ecstasy of gratitude she seized one of his hands in both of her own.

"You can save him!"

"For you—I will try."

"For me—?"

She was so close that he could feel the throbbing of her breast. Suddenly he lifted his free hand and brushed back the thick hair from her brow and turned her face until what dim light there still remained of the day glowed in the beauty of her eyes.

"I will keep him from the island if I can," he said, looking deep into them, "and as there is a God in heaven I swear that you—"

"What?" she urged, as he hesitated.

"That you shall not marry Strang!" he finished.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

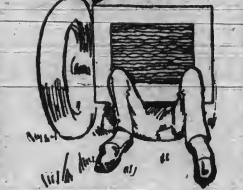

De Forest, Wis.—"After an operation four years ago I had pains downward in both sides, backache, and a weakness. The doctor wanted me to have another operation. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am entirely cured of my troubles."

Another Operation Avoided. New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases. The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing female ills from which so many women suffer.

If you want special advice about your case write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

RATHER FAST. "What is the fastest run your auto ever made?" "It ran me $200 in debt the first week I had it."

Hence the Name. In the service of a Baltimore family is an old negro cook known as Aunt Sally, and not the least of her achievement is the preparation of sea food.

In the kitchen one day Aunt Sally's nephew, a minor sea and land cook, pointed where crabs are seldom seen, was watching in breathless interest the old lady's dexterity of a dish of such crustaceans.

"Aunt," said he, after much reflection upon this mysterious point, "does debilit crabs come from de debilit?"

"No, chile," promptly responded Aunt Sally; "but dey is de debilit to make."

The Preface to Trade. "I had a curious experience yesterday," said Farmer Cornstossel.

"What was it?"

"A stranger came along and told me a funny story and didn't try to sell me anything."

The worst deadbeat is he who refuses to pay a debt of gratitude.

Smith vs. Sullivan.

Local checker fans are just now very much agitated in the contest that is on between Newton Sullivan, the noted local base ball umpire, and Earl Smith, the famous great center fielder. They are engaged in a series of twenty-five games, fourteen of which have been played, each winning seven. Smith says from now on all the series is decided "Sullie" will not be in it, but "Sullie" is confident that he will be able to annex at least a majority of the eleven games yet to be played.

The Trust's Wall Chart.

In a previous article we spoke of the chart and said we would explain how it was obtained. Every intelligent farmer knows how the American Tobacco Co. has become such a powerful factor in the finances of our country. They began in the dark, their plans were laid in the night and they are still working in the dark. We know little or nothing of their line of procedure until they have the net securely fastened. It is not necessary to go into detail as to the formation of this trust. Every farmer knows to his sorrow it is here. On the ground and at work. Weyliger, Liggett & Meyers were about the last of the large tobacco growers that stood out against the trust. You know how as they would lay up these manufacturing plants the price of tobacco would go down. Go down enough to make the farmer pay for the plant. So it was not the trust money that bought up these plants but the farmers.

After getting control, shutting out all competition, they sent their men through every county as they said, to get a map of every county in the Burley belt. Take Boone county for instance. He would find the main roads leading out from every little town in each precinct and mark the name of every man on that road, the size of his farm, amount of tobacco grown and the general standing of the man in the community. Some of you farmers think you are not known away from home but you are known in New York to Mr. Duke alright. Not only the size of your farm but your character, and estimate made to him by your neighbors and that you know is generally correct. How did Mr. Duke, living in New York, know where to establish warehouses? By reference to his chart, and then he would send a committee to make a personal investigation. We mention these facts that we might know the strength of our enemy.

The true and wise general never goes into battle without first numbering his own forces and getting the best estimate possible of the enemy, and if he finds they are not strong enough to meet the enemy the wise thing to do is to retreat to a place of safety, and wait for recruits. The enemy has us on the run and the part of wisdom is to retreat to a place of safety, and that place is to entrench behind the 1911 crop and the entrenchment being no tobacco for 1911, without an established price before the crop is pitched.

This can be done now before men make their trades for another year. Paul, the learned apostle said he was debtor both to the Jew and Greek, to the wise and the unwise. Let us learn wisdom from our enemy, and learn from the lack of wisdom on the part of the farmer. So let us travel these roads that the trust traveled a few years ago and get every farmer to sign that he will not raise any tobacco in 1911 without a LIVING PRICE established before the crop is put out. We are tired of working for the A. T. Co. without any contract from Mr. Duke. Our hands on the farm will not work for us that way. Now is our time to work, not just wait spring. The price should not be unreasonable; let us not be extortioners; the price should be established by a committee elected by the people, one or two from each precinct. Let it be distinctly a FARMERS MOVEMENT, but not cutting out the local merchant or our local banks. They have proven true friends and have stood nobly by the farmer, and we need their council. United we stand, divided we fall. Bury all malice beneath the heart of charity and let us not discuss with malice in our hearts the cause of the failure of the 1910 crop, and thus widen the breach between neighbors. Let by gones be by gones. Let us get a correct estimate as possible of our own WEAKNESS, and profit by it. There have been lots of mistakes made but none so serious as what might have been remedied had the people been faithful to their own interest, and thrown around their brother the mantle of charity and gone to work to remedy the mistakes instead of criticizing.

The Trust has made mistakes too. The first mistake Mr. Duke made was when he undertook to crowd down the price of tobacco below five cents, which would have been done by this time if it had not been for the uprising of the people.

Let me draw you a picture with two scenes and may the Lord of heaven, the source of all wisdom, enable me to make it so vivid that it will burn its way into the heart and conscience of every true citizen of this grand old commonwealth. The first scene will be the meeting place of the A. T. Co. They come to their place of meeting, riding in automobiles with great pomp and gusto they enter their palatial hall, seat themselves in comfortable chairs around a marble top table and proceed to business. This board consists of a large number of directors with big salaries, a president with $100,000 salary per year; vice-president with $50,000 salary. Several of the best lawyers in N. Y. at large salaries. I mention these salaries that you may know that men who can command such salaries must be men of great intelligence, men that can plan great things, make plans that will culminate five or ten years in the future.

Mr. Duke, the president, calls the meeting to order and makes the statement, "we have business of utmost importance. We have been investigating the most trust scheme of which we are all large stock holders. In short the plan is this. From their chart, they also have a chart, and other means they have a correct estimate of the number of hogs and cattle, and amount of grain in the elevators. We also have large stock in the elevators. Now, the plan is to get control of the grain, open up foreign markets, raise the price of meat until we fill all of our cold storage plants to the top. Then after we have depleted the country of hogs and cattle, we will raise the price and unload our meat on the people at HIGH PRICES. Now, Mr. Lawyers, your part will be when the people begin to cry out at the high prices, that you can the papers turn the tide against the farmers. Say the farmer is organizing, putting up the price of everything and keep the cold storage plant in the background, blind the city people, do your best. Now we need money to carry on from our warehouses and Mr. PLAN to get it is the LOWER the price of tobacco that we may make LARGER DIVIDENDS and take the STOCK in the MEAT TRUST.

"One of the directors rose, and said, 'Mr. President, tobacco is already so low that it is lower than they will be an uprising among the farmers.' Mr. Duke replied, 'the fool FARMER can not organize and if he does he won't stick to a prophecy that proved true in 1910. The corresponding committee rose and said, 'Mr. President there is a demand from our warehousemen for more pay. They say they can not rise over hills and through rain to buy this tobacco at fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per year. They must have an increase.' Mr. Duke replied, 'write them they will not have to ride, just go out and buy a few crops from the leading men of every community at good prices and go home and they can buy the rank file sitting in their offices at OUR PRICE for they have no place else to sell. We have practically no opposition.' So the edict went forth signed and sealed by Mr. Duke. LOWER PRICES FOR TOBACCO, and there was great sorrow over all the land and a cry went up from all the people, 'what are we doing?' This brought me to the second scene in the picture continued next week. C. C. SLEET.

The New High Bridge.

Early in 1911, the new High Bridge which is to span the Kentucky river on the Queen & Crescent Route will have been completed. It will be the highest bridge spanning a navigable stream on the American continent and is to be the most massive structure of its length and breadth known to the civilized world and will have a sustaining capacity of 7,000 tons. In the erection of this wonderful span, more than two million two hundred thousand rivets and fourteen million pounds of tested steel are required. Almost two years were spent in manufacturing the great steel sections that are being combined to produce this marvelous product of American skill. This bridge which has attracted sight seers of every nation is constructed of iron in weight one-fourth as massive as the steel of which the new bridge is being made. On account of the superior material of the new structure it will have about five times the sustaining power of the old one. From the top of the rails of the new bridge to the water in the river below, the distance is 415 feet. It will require 140,000 pounds of steel rails and 2,000 ties to build the double track across the bridge which is 1,123 feet in length. Thousands of people are now being attracted to the scene to witness the building of a structure the like of which exists nowhere else on the whole American continent and it is fitting that this marvelous handiwork of man should have as its setting a landscape that is unrivaled in natural beauty and charm.

Picturesque Kentucky river, with its towering cliffs, lifting themselves more than three hundred feet above the water line, are in full view from the train while passing over the bridge. At this point the winding stream has been dammed by tourists of all countries as the Switzerland of the Western Hemisphere. The wonderful height and powerful strength of the concrete girder of steel may be attained elsewhere but the amazing picture which nature has painted for the background is never being approached in the category of human achievements.

The Habit of Hand Shaking.

Shaking hands is a relic of barbarism, anyhow. It became the custom in the days when every man carried a dagger in his belt, and when one friend meeting another thought it necessary to attest peacefulness of his intentions by extending an open palm. Then the other man could do no less than make a similarly reassuring demonstration, and the custom of these extended hands naturally followed. Subsequently, by a logical process of evolution the hand-shake grew to be the conventional form of greeting, and the refusal of a proffered hand was regarded as one of those insults whose dishonor can only be wiped away by a counter blow. Now the custom is too firmly and widely established for its abandonment to be conceivable—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A good many millions of Americans must have thought and thought kindly of William Tatt Tuesday night. Well, it was not his funeral. He related, and we can not imagine his ever losing the respect of his countrymen. He has been shamefully used and shamefully betrayed; but his patience, his forbearance, his justice, his modesty, his calmness, his unselfishness, all the moral and all the mental qualities by which he differs from his predecessor, are not lost upon the American people. They like Wm. H. Tatt. They wish well to him and his administration. We don't know how they could show it more forcibly, in spite of Mr. Tatt's characteristically generous advice, than by voting against his most extreme opponents and his most treacherous and dangerous enemy. Nobody has anything against the master of the house because the devil had to be driven out of it. New York Sun.

Rev. J. C. Wright, pastor of the Walton M. E. church, who resides at Erlanger, preached two fine sermons at the Walton church last Sunday to a very attentive congregation.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Young spent the past week with relatives and friends near Harrison, Ohio. Mr. Young has charge of the log department of the G. W. Males saw mill here.

R. J. Codey and son, Geo. of Covington, and Hal G. Blanton, of Erlanger, enjoyed the pleasures of a fine hunt in this country the day of the opening of the game season, Tuesday.

The hunters were out in full force Tuesday, inaugurating the season. Game is not very plentiful, and the farmers have generally posted their fences against hunters and trespassers.

E. E. Dailey, of Bloomington, Indiana, shipped, Monday, a car quarter, part from Mylor and Brown, of Warsaw, and the balance from B. B. Allphin.

H. C. Duncan, a prominent farmer of near Bullittsville, spent a part of last week here with many friends, and while here he bought a very fancy gelding from C. Scott Chambers at a very fancy price. His many friends here were glad to meet him again.

Mrs. A. L. Dorsey and Miss Maggie Rice spent Sunday with home folks at Richmond. Mrs. Dorsey is conducting a dressmaking establishment in the residence of Jno. L. Vest, and Miss Rice is assisting her in the work. They do much work and are being well patronized.

Mrs. Geo. W. Griffith and two daughters have moved to Walton from Sanders, and have rented the E. P. Vallandigham property. Mr. Griffith is the proprietor of the box ball alley and wanted his family here with him. Mr. Vallandigham and family have moved to Ludlow to be close to his place of employment.

John F. Hammond, of Metamora, Indiana, spent part of the past week here the guest of D. A. Lunford and family. Mr. Lunford accompanied Mr. Hammond home for a prospecting trip intending to purchase property there and move to that quarter next spring. We would regret to lose Mr. Lunford from our community as he is an enterprising, up-to-date citizen of many splendid qualities.

Rev. Wm. L. Kohler, of Cincinnati, spent Sunday and Monday here with his congregation and preached two excellent sermons at the Walton Christian church. Kohler left for Lexington Monday evening where he attends the College of the Christian church. He preaches at the second and fourth Sundays in every month.

Miss Margaret Marshall and her niece, Miss Lettie Krutz, of Warsaw, and Jas. W. Wolf, of Georgetown, were visitors here Monday, enroute to Georgetown. Mr. Wolf had been visiting relatives at Warsaw and the ladies accompanied him home for a visit.

Miss Krutz is the telephone operator at Warsaw, and is very popular with the boys, having been ordered a new trial. The verdict was for nineteen thousand dollars.

The Business Principle

of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent. interest on what remains a year, or three per cent for what repays six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. We qualify as administrator, executor, trustee, guardian, etc., of estates, which is much more satisfactory than a private individual in such capacity. Mail communications given careful attention. Relieved of Its Sufferings.

E. B. Hume brought a fine horse out from the city, a few weeks ago, hoping that with the assistance of Dr. O. S. Crisler he would be able to cure it of its lameness, but as soon as Dr. Crisler examined the animal he discovered it had been nerved, and pronounced it hopeless. After a few days Mr. Hume was compelled to take it to the veterinarian to treat it, but he took it in payment for his services, but last Saturday the horse was led to the back yard where an end was put to its life by injecting air into a vein. The removing of the nerve had deadened the horse's foot which was gradually decaying and wasting away. Moving a nerve will often relieve a horse of lameness but will ultimately destroy it by the rotting process.

The president is the acknowledged orator of the club and when he is always something doing. The proceedings of last Sunday evening would make a volume of very interesting reading.

Mr. Oscar Gaines was transacting business in Burlington on afternoon last week, and his friends were glad to meet him, as they had not seen him for some time.

W. Lee Gaines and son, of Walton, spent part of last week with his brother, J. E. Gaines and family, out on the Bellevue pike, hunting being their principal amusement.

A. P. Robinson, of Richwood, who went to California early this fall, concluded his winter in Kentucky with his father, E. P. Robinson, consequently he is at home again.

M. S. Rice and Sergeant Thomas Savage returned to Covington Friday afternoon, with a rabbit, one quail and a small possum as the result of their two-day hunt in this vicinity.

Knox County Judge, C. C. Roberts spent last week at the residence of his brother-in-law, County Clerk W. R. Rogers, with his farm work. Mr. Roberts being too much indisposed to see after his work.

John Harman, of Big Bone, was transacting business in Burlington, last Friday. Mr. Harman bought a farm near Big Bone a few years since and is making the money out of it to meet his payments, and is improving his land at the same time.

Congressman-elect A. B. Rouse spent part of last week in Trimble county in pursuit of the few wild rabbits that were left. The hills and dales of the good little county were gone over thoroughly, and a great time was had by all. The hunters were more than on a freight car to convey to market the birds and rabbits that were killed by the party.

Mr. F. A. Hall, of the Recorder force, was called to Loveland, O., last Saturday because of the sudden death of the evening before of his sister, Mrs. Kate Creager. Mrs. Creager had started to Loveland for her daughter, and had gone about half a mile, when she returned, but did not notice anything that something was the matter with the lady occupant, he hailed a hunting party that came in an auto. Among the party in the machine was a doctor, who at once saw Mrs. Creager was dead. She was in her 61st year, and was the only daughter of the late A. O. Hall, of Burlington, and the wife of four brothers, Thomas, of Springfield, Ohio, and Samuel, Frank and Everett, of Burlington; and two sisters, Mrs. Mary Moore, of Loveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Richard White, of Burlington, she leaves a husband, Leam Creager and a son, Leam Lullie, and a host of friends to mourn her death. The acquaintances of the deceased here at her old home expressed their sympathy to the bereaved family.

Robt. Mallory, son of the late Henry Mallory, was buried Monday at Petersburg. He died of consumption.

Bad weather is not far away.

The Boone County Medical Society met at the K. of P. Hall at Bowling Green, Ky., at 7 o'clock, the following physicians being present: C. A. Paul, P. B. Conner and Gordon B. Smith, Cincinnati; J. G. Fugate, Covington; F. L. Woodward, Burlington; H. C. Foster, Florence; H. A. Ray, Bullittsville; O. Saylor, Union; C. W. Collins, P. B. Shaker, Lexington.

After the business part of the program Dr. McCullum read an excellent paper on the Medical Treatment of Insanity, which was warmly discussed by all present.

Dr. Paul then read a paper on The Non-operative Treatment of Hernia, which was also warmly discussed by all present.

Both of the above were very instructive, containing much helpful information.

At about 11 o'clock the physicians were invited out to the residence of Mrs. Milla Tallaferra, where a most bountiful spread for the gods was served, and the doctors were ready for it.

The banquet table, which was in charge of Mrs. Tallaferra, and Misses Scott and Fogg, was artistically decorated in ferns and carnations and was a thing of beauty and a joy forever, because the joy of the hungry M.D.s when they beheld the sumptuously laden table will never be forgotten.

During the banquet, which lasted from one to a half to two hours, Mrs. Nipper and Mrs. Rouse kept the air filled with music, both vocal and instrumental, which added very greatly to the pleasure of the occasion.

The Boone County Medical Society are certainly very grateful to the entertainers for their evening's entertainment and a special thanks to all who so ably assisted them in same.

Columns could be written in regard to this meeting, but sufficient to say it was one of the best this society has ever enjoyed.

The next meeting will be held in December at Burlington, and will be in joint session with the Boone Literary Society, and a great time is expected. Both societies will take part in the program of the evening and quite an interesting program will be arranged, due notice of which will be given.

Filtered air, rid of all impurities such as dirt and smoke, is all that is breathed by the State officials and employees and visitors to the Capitol. Ordinary air is not good enough, is the opinion of those from the outside and drawn thru a curtain of running water, before it is heated and admitted to the building. This fact is known to only those who have investigated the new Capitol thoroughly, for the apparatus which cleanses the air is hidden in the top and the basement of the building.

By an arrangement of the big fans, driven by electric motors, the air is drawn from the outside into a small room where it can be slightly warmed. If the weather is very cold, from which it is forced through a double spray of running water. The water catches dust and other impurities and the air, after passing through the water, is said to be as pure as it can be made. Back of the room the heating system where the air is heated in water, before admission to the building. One of these cleaning plants is located on the fourth floor of the building, on the west side, and supplies the offices on that side of the building. The air is forced down a chimney to the first floor and distributed thru ventilators.

Another air cleaner is in the basement. This is much larger than the other and supplies a larger number of offices with clean warm air. Few visitors are allowed to see the inside workings of the air cleaning plants, as they are hard to reach and it takes too much time to show people through.

Independent citizenship will be accepted to accept with equanimity the Democratic victories throughout the nation. Such results as the return of Mr. Cannon and the election of Toner in Pennsylvania, are of no significance, the general result being a decisive, and in many respects a wholesome, rebuke of the party in power.

The clearest fact that stands out in the wreck of Republican hopes is this: Wherever Republican victory has been won they are due to the progressive movement within the party. In some states this movement has made its way in time to save the party from defeat, but where the leaders have clung to the old order and have tried to defend the Payne tariff bill, their overthrow has been decisive.

The Democratic party throughout the nation is shaking off the incubus of Bryanism and under other leadership is appealing to the brains and character of the American people. Its record of past performance is not such as to justify great hopes of satisfactory achievement in Congress. The most of these new Democratic Governors will give able and vigorous administration of state affairs. The freedom with which men cast off party ties is a faithful index to the waning zeal for party ascendancy as such. Good government means more and more to us all and parties triumph less and less. From this overwhelming rebuke the Republican party should derive a salutary lesson. The nation is crying for the most they will learn.

Mr. Luther Guthrie, of Beaufort, N. C. spent money freely in employing doctors to cure his wife from continual headache. He writes:

Those who have tobacco are anxious for damp weather that will enable them to strip it and have it ready to sell as soon as they can get a satisfactory price.

The Equity Society of Hancock and McLean counties sold to the American Tobacco Company 7,000,000 lbs. tobacco at $8 for leaf $5 for lugs and $3 for trash.

The Governor's interference with the course of justice in Tennessee gave that State a Republican Governor, while a Governor's interference with the course of justice in Kentucky furnished a Republican Congressman. In Tennessee the interfering Governor is a Democrat; in Kentucky he is a Republican and the cases in which they figured were parallel.

With the races for Congressmen and Judges of the Court of Appeals off the boards, both Democrats and Republicans in this State will now turn their attention to the construction of State tickets to be voted for at the next November election, consequently they will begin to beat the bushes in search of votes, and a merry scramble will soon be on.

The mountains of Kentucky, the least known and most abused section of the United States, have, in the past few years made rapid strides in the commercial world. Where formerly known, almost exclusively as a dueling ground of the feudist, this section has in late years established a reputation abroad for its wonderful development in the coal and timber industries.

Some people do not seem to get it into their heads that it is cruel to pluck ducks or geese late in the fall and have them shivering around cold frosty mornings. Only the breasts of geese or ducklings should be picked the first season if you want the birds to do well. The feathers surely pay for keeping ducks or geese in feather beds and pillows are articles which money can scarcely buy in the cities.—Western Recorder.

The food prices have reached their climax and now are on the down grade is the belief of meat dealers—all over the country. Dealers in produce and other food supplies say the same thing. Charles W. Armour, head of the Armour interests in Kansas City, said: "General food prices are working toward a lower basis. The cereals are getting down. People are going to take advantage of the lower prices, and that will help to relieve the stringency in meat prices, especially pork."

The practice of writing on newspapers and packages, imparting some information to relatives or friends on papers and parcels mailed them, has become so common with thoughtless and ignorant people that the $10 penalty of the post has been made $100 by the postal department, and hereafter offenders will have to stand arrest and trial. Newspapers can do the general public good by calling attention to the latest governmental action on the matter.

The Indians and the old-timers say that the coming winter will be one of the coldest on record. They point to the fact that the fur-bearing animals are growing thicker and longer coats than customary, that muskrats are building their houses larger and higher than is their custom in mid-winter, that the bears are starting in to make their dens in the most protected places they can find, and the little chipmunks and gophers are also preparing for a siege. They say these signs never fail.

Considerable excitement was caused in Burlington late last Saturday afternoon by a message over the Farmer's telephone line announcing the residence of Asa Cason, two and a quarter miles out on the East Bend road, was being rapidly consumed by fire. It was some time before the report was corrected by a message over the same line saying that only a fire was burnt out. The building was in danger for some time, and it required the use of considerable water to prevent the roof from igniting.

W. A. Hatcher brought to town Saturday a wagon load of blue corn and it attracted much attention in town, many declaring that it was the first of that color that they had ever seen. Hatcher said that he had secured the seed for this from the Indian, who had finally grown the blue corn. The corn is a new variety, and the sales of the personal property of Eli Tanner, deceased, and H. B. Stephens, are advertised in this issue.

Much misapprehension as to the game law passed by the last Legislature has arisen in this county and probably many other counties, especially as to setting traps and snares for rabbits and other game. The act that passed was very brief and in its following:

"That it shall be unlawful for any one to set a steel trap, deadfall or snare or to loose or hunt with a ferret upon the premises or property of another, without first securing the written consent of the owner of the premises or property, and any one thus offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction he shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $25."

"Having in possession game caught as set out in section one shall be prima facie evidence of guilt as herein provided."—Ex.

That is the plurality by which the people of the 17 counties comprising the Covington-Newport Appellate Court District re-elected Judge John M. Lassing.

Judge Lassing, this morning, carrying it by a greater majority than any presidential or gubernatorial candidate in recent years.

"I see," said Judge Lassing to The Post Saturday, "that some kind friends are starting a slight boom for me for U. S. Senator, to succeed Judge Paynter, I wish you would make it as strong as you know how that I am not out for the Senate or for any other job."

"I am deeply grateful to the people of my district for sending me back to the bench by such a handsome majority, and I expect, if I live, to serve out my full term."

"I shall try by hard work and judicious decisions to make the people feel that their judgment was right when they re-elected me."

Judge Lassing will start his eight-year term Jan. 1 next, and in about four years will become Chief Justice of the court—Kentucky Post.

The Recorder is gratified to see Judge Lassing take the position he does in regard to becoming a candidate for an office immediately following his election to another.

No sooner did Indiana take her place in the Democratic column than C. H. Acra, the old war horse, took up his abode on her soil, near French, where he is delighted with his surroundings. He desires to express his gratitude to Frank D. Smith, John Klopp, Eugene Witham, Dr. House and Van Snyder for assistance rendered when he moved. He says a good crop of corn is being sold where he is at from 40 to 45 cents per bushel.

The Courage of Captain Plum

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

SYNOPSIS.

Capt. Nathaniel Plum, of the sloop Typhoon, landed secretly on Beaver Island, stronghold of the Mormons. He was suddenly confronted by Obadiah Price, an eccentric old man and a member of the Mormon council, who tells him that he is suspected. Price ignores Nath's protestations that he has got the wrong man, and demands for the ammunition aboard the sloop. He binds Nath with a woman each to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. Near Price's cabin Nath sees the frightened face of a young woman who disappears in the darkness, leaving Price as the only charge of the sloop with orders to bombard St. James if Nath does not return within a certain time. Price takes Nath to a dark room, to the king's home, and shows him a woman who is the wife of the black, whom Price says is the seventh wife. Plum calls at the king's office, where he is warned by a young woman that his life is in danger. Strange receives Plum cordially, professing indignation when he hears the captain's grievances, and promises to punish the guilty. Plum again receives warning of his danger. He rescues Nath, who is being badly whipped. The black orders Arber Crooke, the sheriff and father of the woman, the king's wife, to kill Plum and Nath. Plum and Nath escape, and kill the two men. Plum and Nath plan to escape on the Typhoon. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the island, is Nath's sister. Plum agrees, carrying her on the ship. Plum approves of the plan to include Winansome, with whom Price is in love, in the enterprise. Nath discovers that the sloop is in the hands of the Mormons. He tells Nath that he heard and Marion tells him his ship has been captured by the Mormons. She sends him to leave the island and prevent her brother from returning. She says nothing can save her from St. James.

She surrendered to the determination in his voice and they moved slowly along the path, listening for any sound that might come from ahead of them. Nathaniel had already formed his plan of action. From Marion's words and the voice in which she had uttered them, he knew that it would be useless for him as it had been for Ned to urge her to flee from the island. There remained but one thing for him to do, so he fell back upon the scheme which he had proposed to Marion's brother. He realized now that he might be compelled to play the game single-handed, unless he could secure assistance from Obadiah. His ship and men were in the hands of the Mormons; Ned, in his search for the captured vessel, stood a large chance of missing him that night, and in that event Marion's fate would depend on him alone. If he could locate a small boat on the beach back of Obadiah's, if he could in some way lure Marion to it—He gave an involuntary shudder at the thought of using force upon the girl at his side, at the thought of her terror of those first few moments, her struggles, her broken confidence. She believed in him now. She believed that he loved her. She trusted him. The soft pressure of her hand as it clung to his arm in the blackening gloom of the forest was evidence of that trust. She looked into his face anxiously, inquiringly when they stopped to listen. Like a child who was sure of a stronger spirit than her own, she held her breath when he held his. She listened when he listened, her feet held with velvet stillness when he stepped with caution. Her confidence in him was like a beautiful dream to Nathaniel and he trembled when he pictured the destruction of it. After a little he reached over and as if by accident touched the hand that was resting on his arm; he dared more after a moment, and drew the warm little fingers into his great strong palm and held them there, his soul thrilled by their gentle submissiveness. And then in another breath there came to still him by a thought of the terrible power that chained this girl to the Mormon king. He longed to speak words of encouragement to her, to instill hope in her bosom, to ask her to confide in him the secret of the shadow which hung over her, but the memory of what Ned had said to him held his lips closed.

They had walked in silence for many minutes when the girl stopped. "It is not very far now," she whispered. "You must go!" "Only a little farther," he begged. She surrendered again, hesitatingly, and they went on, more slowly than before, until they came to where the path met the foot of the hill that led to the king's house.

"I will promise," "At midnight," "Yes, at 12 o'clock." This time it was Marion who came to him. Her eyes shone like stars. "And if you make Ned go to the mainland?" she said softly, "when I meet you I will—will tell you—something!"

The last word came in a breathless sob. As she slipped into the path that led to St. James she paused for a moment and called back, in a low voice: "Tell Ned that he must go to Winansome's. Tell him that her fate is shortly to be as cruel as mine—tell him that Winansome loves him, and that she will escape and come to him on the mainland. Tell him to go—go!"

She turned again, and Nathaniel stood like a statue, hardly breathing, until the light of her feet had died away. Then he walked swiftly up the steep path that led to Obadiah's. He forgot his own danger in the excitement that pulsated with every fiber of his being, forgot his old caution and the fears that gave birth to it—forgot everything in those moments but Marion and his own great happiness. Ned's absence meant nothing to him now. He had held Marion in his arms, he had kissed her, and though she had accepted it with gentle unresponsiveness he was thrilled by the memory of that last look in her eyes, which had spoken faith, confidence, and perhaps even more. What was that something she would tell him if he got Ned safely away? It was to be a reward for his own loyalty—he knew that, by the old wild hope that he had, by the half-fearing tremble of her voice, the sobbing catch of her breath, the strange glow in her eyes. With her brother away she would confide in him? Would she tell him the secret of her slavery to St. James? Nathaniel was conscious of no madness in the wild hope that filled him; nothing seemed impossible to him now. Marion would meet him at midnight. She would go with him to the boat, and then—ah, he had solved the problem! He would use no force. He would tell her that Ned was in his canoe half a mile out from the shore and that he had promised to leave the island and go to the mainland, and to bid him good-by. And once there, a half a mile or a mile away, he would tell her that he had lied to her; and he would give her his heart to trample upon to prove the love that had made him do this thing, and then he would row her to the mainland.

It was the night of Obadiah's cabin. He brought his caution back. He came upon it so suddenly that an exclamation of surprise fell unguarded from his lips. There was no light to betray him within. He tried the door and found it locked. He peered at the windows, listened, and knocked, and at last concealed himself near the path, confident that the little old counselor was still at St. James. For an hour he waited. From the rear of Obadiah's home a narrow footway led toward the lake and Nathaniel followed it, now as warily as an animal in search of prey. For half a mile it took him through the forest and ended at the white sands of the beach. In neither direction could Nathaniel see a light, and keeping close in the shadows of the trees he made his way slowly toward St. James. He had gone but a short distance when he saw a house of nearly white of him, a single gleam of light from a small window telling him that it was inhabited and that its tenants were at home. He circled down close to the water looking for a boat. His heart leaped with sudden exultation when he saw a small skiff drawn upon the beach and he lay down, doubled at finding the oars still in the locks. It took him but a moment to shove the light craft into the sea and a minute later he was rowing swiftly away from the land.

Nathaniel was certain that by this time Ned had abandoned his search for the captured Typhoon and was probably paddling in the direction of St. James. With the hope of intercepting him he pulled an oar of a mile from the shore and rowed slowly toward the head of the island. There was no moon, but countless stars glowed in a clear sky and upon the open lake Nathaniel could see a faint gleam of light from the mainland.

down from the path that came down from Obadiah's.

It was 10 o'clock. Two more hours! He had tried to suppress his excitement, his apprehensions, his eagerness, but now as he went back into the darkness of the forest they burst out again. What if Marion should not keep the trust? He thought of the spies whom Ned had said guarded the girl's home—and of Obadiah. Could he trust the old counselor? Should he confide his plot to him and ask his assistance? As the minutes passed and the hours rolled on, he grew again and again in his brain he could not keep the nervousness from growing within him. He was sure now that he would have to fight his battle without Ned. He saw the necessity of coolness, of judgment, and he began to demand these things of himself, struggling sternly against those symptoms of weakness which had replaced his confidence of a short time before. Gradually he fought himself back into his old faith. He would save Marion—without Ned, without Obadiah. If Marion did not come to him by midnight it would be because of the guard against whom Ned had warned him, and he would go to her in some way he would get her to the boat, even if he had to fight his way through Arber Crooke's men.

With this return of confidence Nathaniel's thoughts reverted to his present greatest need, which was food. Since early morning he had eaten nothing and he began to feel the effects of his hunger. The water was becoming acutely uncomfortable. If Obadiah had not returned to his home he made up his mind that he would find entrance to the cabin and help himself. A sudden turn in the path which he was following, however, revealed one of the counselor's windows aglow with light, and as he pressed quickly around the end of the building the sound of a low voice came to him through the open door. Carefully he approached and peered in. A large oil lamp, the light of which he had seen in the window, was burning on a table in the little room, but the voice came from the little closet into which Obadiah had taken him the preceding night. For several minutes he crouched and listened. He heard the chuckling laugh of the old counselor—and then an incoherent faving that set his blood tingling. There is a horror in the sound of madness, a horror that creeps to the very pit of one's soul, that sends shivering dread from every nerve center, that causes one who is alone with it to swear with a nameless fear. It was the voice of madness that came from that little room. Before it Nathaniel quailed as if a clammy hand had reached out from the darkness and gripped him by the throat. He drew back shivering in every limb, and the voice followed him, shrieking now in a sudden burst of insane mirth and dying away a moment later in a hollow cackling laugh that seemed to curdle the blood in his veins. "Mad! Obadiah Price was mad! Step by step Nathaniel fell back from the door. He felt himself trembling from head to foot. His heart thumped wildly, his breast like the beating of a hammer. For a moment there was silence—a silence in which strange dread held him breathless while he watched the glow in the door and listened. And after that quiet there came suddenly a cry that ended in the exultant chattering of a name.

The sound of that name—Nathaniel's—forward again. It was Marion's name and he strained his ears to catch the words that might follow it. As he listened, his head thrust half in at the door, Obadiah's voice became lower and lower, until at last it ceased entirely. Not a step, not a deep breath, not the movement of hand or limb disturbed the stillness of the little room. By James Nathaniel drew himself inside the door. His heavy boot caught in a stirrup on the step but the rending of wood brought no response. It was the quiet of death that pervaded the cabin, it was a strange, growing fear of death that entered Nathaniel as he now hurried across the room and peered through the narrow aperture. The old counselor was half stretched upon the table, his arms reaching out, his long, thin fingers gripping its edges, his face buried under his shoulders. It looked as if death had come suddenly to him during some terrible convulsion, but after a moment Nathaniel saw that he was breathing. He went in and placed a hand on the old man's twisted back.

"Hello, Obadiah! Hello—hello!" He called cheerfully.

The Guarantee. Approves of the superb additions to Metro-Goldwyn pictures in New York, J. Hopkinson Smith said: "They are good works, too. They are all good works. Not like our American Rembrandts." "I am afraid that most of our millionaires bought their Rembrandts too cheaply—much as Tobias Goldie bought his." "Goldie Goldie, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Lolla, picked out a Rembrandt at a foreign dealer's, and then, before plunking down the cash said very sternly: "Now, see here, sir, do you guarantee this Rembrandt?" "Yes, Mr. Goldie," the dealer replied. "A seven years' guarantee goes with the canvas." "Oh, very well," said Goldie, miffed, and he took out his check book and fountain pen.

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Than I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk. "My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any more of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment. "I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent interest on what remains a year, or three per cent for what repays six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. A good rain is needed. No rural mails out to-day. The local banks are closed today. Read the advertisements in this issue. Circuit court will be here in a few weeks. Nothing doing today except with dog and gun. Croup is most prevalent during the dry cold weather of the early winter months. Parents of young children should be prepared for it. All that is needed is a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many mothers are never without it in their homes and it has never disappointed them. Sold by all dealers.

HOG-KILLING TIME.

How to Cure Bacon and How to Make Sausage to Get Best Possible Results.

The crisp, cold and clear weather we have been enjoying for some weeks, has made the glorious hog-killing season a popular holiday with many of our farmers. Another item in connection with "hog-killing" is how to get the best results, which is thus given to the school in the business in the Farmers Home Journal.

Block out your hogs as soon after killing as possible to facilitate cooling. The following day trim hams and shoulders close and cut off the tip part of the middle and hock joints into two or more lots depending upon size of hogs butchered. Weigh one or two of each lot to determine the average weight in each lot. But these separately and allow to remain in salt one day for each pound, for example, say one lot will average fourteen pounds, place this lot should remain in salt fourteen days under favorable conditions. That is weather when meat takes salt. Salt and brine weather meat does not take salt and three or four days should be allowed. Meat should be raised and the salt rubbed in again, wait on the third day after it is put down.

Use twelve pounds of salt, two pounds granulated sugar, and two and one-half ounces of saltpeter to the hundred pounds of meat. When all the meat is hung, including the heaviest lot of hams, smoke for three days with green hickory, ash or maple-hickory preferred.

From twenty to thirty days after meat is smoked, it should be soaked in light cane or heavy paper bags. At this time, dip each piece in water that is very near boiling and rub on a mixture of one-half pound of pepper and five pounds of brown sugar. The dipping will kill any insects and make mixture just mentioned stick well. Meat put up according to the above directions has a very delicious flavor, excellent color and will keep indefinitely.

To make good sausage, have one pound of meat for each pound of lean as near as you can come at it. To each three pounds of meat use one tablespoon each of salt, black ground pepper and good country sage.

To sprinkle the seasoning over the meat before grinding distributes it nicely, but hand working is necessary for nice, light sausage and should not be neglected. Sausage may be packed in crock and a skin of mottled lard poured on top of it, or may be stuffed in long cotton bags or put in casings. The latter can be obtained at about three cents per pound, which is cheaper than preparing them at home.

BOONE COUNTY CORN SHOW.

Let Every Farmer Pull for the Corn Show and Help Make it a Success in Every Way.

Hiram Long, of Florence neighborhood, was in Burlington, last Friday, to the interest of the Boone Co. corn show which it is proposed to have some time about the middle of December. The committee which is working up the show is composed of Hiram Long and Geo. Hafer, of Florence; Daniel B. Dobbins, of Richwood; and Noah C. Annas, of Union. They have gone to show that the several premiums that will be awarded will be large enough to make them worth contending for. The committee will meet one day this week when the time and place of the show will be decided upon, and, probably, the list of premiums will be made up and furnished the Recorder for publication.

There is nothing in which the farmers of Boone county are more interested than the cultivation of corn, about which there is a vast amount for some of them to learn, although they have been engaged in producing it for years. All their lives. The corn show, which it is hoped to make an annual event, is intended to create a desire, among the farmers in the county, to acquire all the information possible as to how to improve the quality of their corn and bring about the best yield. Coming together at a corn show, exhibiting results and discussing methods, is bound to redound to the advantage of the farmers, as the time has come that to achieve the best results scientific methods must be adopted. Some who have given the matter close attention do not hesitate to say that if the farmers in Boone county were to adopt modern methods in their corn crops they would produce one-third more corn to the acre. This being true it behooves farmers to modernize their methods in the production of corn. Let everybody pull for the corn show and make it a success in every particular.

Wants To Help Some One. For thirty years J. F. Boyer, of Fertile, Mo., needed help and he couldn't find it. That's why he wants to help some one else. Suffering so long himself he feels for all distress from Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, Lassitude and Kidney disorders. He shows that Electric Bitters work wonders for such troubles. "Five bottles," he writes, "wholly cured me and now I am well and hearty." It's also positively guaranteed for Liver Troubles, Dyspepsia, Blood Disorders, Female Complaints and Malaria. Try them at Bender's drug store, Erlanger.

Considerable lightning off to the south and southeast, last Thursday night.

Remains were in the hands of the undertaker.

Fletcher, in his 82nd year, died at his home near Burlington Baptist church last Thursday at 7 p. m., after an illness of several months. At the age of 19 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Clatterbuck, sister of the late J. R. Clatterbuck. Besides his wife two children, a son, James Clore, and daughter Mrs. Anna Morris, both of Rushville, Indiana, survive him. He was a son of the late Benjamin Clore, of Francesville neighborhood, and was a brother of Cave and Nancy Clore, of that neighborhood, and of Mrs. William Hedges, near Burlington; Mrs. Beakel Rice, of Waterloo; and Mrs. Perry Huey, of Plymouth, Illinois. After a funeral service at the home, conducted by Rev. Edgar Riley, last Saturday afternoon the remains, which were in the care of undertaker Scott Chambers, of Walton, were shipped to Rushville, Indiana, at which place Mrs. Clore had expressed a desire to be buried. The community, which mourns the loss of a good citizen and neighbor, sympathizes with the bereaved wife, son and daughter.

THE ENTERTAINMENT.

Ludlow Dramatic Club played to a fair sized audience at Library Hall, last Thursday night, considering the very uncertain conditions of the weather. The audience people will not turn out on such occasions unless a good night is a certainty. The play "A Kentucky Belle," is an interesting comedy susceptible of considerable nice acting, in which the young ladies got much the better of the gentlemen, although they were at least the equal of the average amateurs. Misses Ada McAtee as Isabel Douglas, Blanche Gardner as Cinda, Alice Wahl as Miss Mariah Douglas, and Virginia Duhann as Marie Van Harlinger are entitled to favorable mention and especially Miss McAtee, who captivated the house by her very excellent interpretation of the character she represented. The lack of music between scenes detracted somewhat from the entertainment. The young people composing the club made a very favorable impression upon those with whom they met while in Burlington.

TWENTY-SIX BAPTIZED.

A very large crowd of colored people and a considerable number of white folks assembled on the bank of the creek below the first bridge out on the Florence pike, last Sunday about 3 p. m. to witness the immersion of the 26 who professed religion during the recent protracted meeting held with Burlington colored Baptist church. About the time the colored minister had completed the baptizing, the elements took a hand and the entire crowd received a sprinkling that approximated a good wetting. Had the weather clerk not put a crimp in the intended program by bringing unpropitious weather, Burlington would have swarmed with colored people, Sunday.

SWARMED WITH HUNTERS.

The knob along Gunpowder creek as well as the level stretches back therefrom, swarmed with hunters last Thursday, and the fusillade throughout the day made one believe, almost, that he had been suddenly transported to the neighborhood of the hostile forces in Mexico. No accident of a serious nature nor any unusual luck on the part of any individual hunter has been reported. The day's strenuous use of the fowling piece, it was a day good for the exhilarating exercise, and many of those composing the army of hunters that overran the land were from the city, and for many days they felt the effects of scaling the hills and crawling between barbed wires on the fences.

Saved From Awful Death.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. McDonald, of Fayetteville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 8. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "she was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day, as all remedies failed, till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and she completely cured her. That she had not been troubled with a cough since, it is the best medicine I ever saw or heard of." For coughs, colds, croup, asthma, croup hemorrhage, all bronchial troubles, it has no equal, 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Bentley's drug store, Burlington.

AN ERRONEOUS IDEA.

Sheriff E. B. Hume says about two-thirds of the revenue due the county and State has been paid in, consequently the law adds the ten per cent as a penalty to the taxes that were not paid before last midnight. Some entertain the erroneous idea that the sheriff pockets the six per cent penalty, but the fact is he receives none of the penalties, they all belonging to the county and State. He receives a commission for collecting the revenues, all the other money going to the county or State.

If you are suffering from illness, constipation, indigestion, chronic headache, invest one cent in a postal card, send to Chamberlain Medicine Co., Des Moines, Iowa, with your name and address plainly on the back, and they will forward you a free sample of Chamberlain's Cough and Croup Tablets. Sold by all dealers.

Elmer Conley, carrier on rural route No. 3, of Burlington, was the recipient of a two bushel sack of rice corn a few days since, which Rell Sullivan, one of his clients, left at his box as a present for the carrier.

The Trust's Wall Chart.

(C. C. Sloan, of Beaver.)

After discussing the question around the stores, many farmers have no club rooms or suitable places for meetings, they never have been able to build such buildings. They have been working for the TRUST, that the Trusts might have such things—working from 4 o'clock in the morning until late at night, the evening of the day, not knowing what they were going to get. So some of the leading men said they would go up and see Mr. Duke. So they did, but had hard work even to get a conference with him. He was too busy to see a farmer. Busy planning the meat trust business. Finally he gave them admittance to his ROYAL PRESENCE. They laid the whole matter before him—how the people were starving, children growing up in ignorance because they had not sufficient clothing to go to school, &c. He heard them through with their sad story and with a sneering smile said, "well, what do you want me to do about it?" They said, "we want you to pay better prices for our tobacco, for we know you can do it and then make plenty of money." He let them know he was tending to his own business and that he was saying all he could afford to pay. They told him if he did not pay more for tobacco they would organize the farmer. Mr. Duke said, "when you organize the farmer I will take my hat off to you." So these poor farmers and tobacco dealers went out from his royal presence, feeling as sad as the children of Israel after pleading with King Rehoboam to make the burdens that his father had placed upon them lighter, and he replied, "my father made you yoke heavy. I will add to your yoke. My father chastized you with whips, I will chastise you with scorpions." So they came back home SAD but not DISCONSOLATE, and we begin to paint the second scene in our picture. A few farmers and tobacco dealers assembled in the court house at Winchester, Ky. Some walked, some rode, not in automobiles, but horse back, mule back—anyway, they were a set of plain but determined men. So they called their meeting to order, about thirty-five being present. Mr. C. M. Hanna was elected chairman. The chairman stated the object of the meeting and explaining the Hawkins movement, how those noble men road over the hills of Kentucky without pay to get farmers to sign their tobacco, expecting, after getting the tobacco signed they would get eastern capitalists to finance the business, but they found no money in the east to HELP THE FARMER. Mr. Duke's trust and the other trusts had their clutches on all the banks. There was plenty of money to finance the meat trust and other trusts but no money to help the farmer. So our only hope is to pool our tobacco and help finance our local banks to finance it, letting each county take care of its own as far as they are able. After discussing the matter for two and one half hours, they started out to pool the tobacco. They got every man they could, who was willing to ride through rain and mud without pay to take a pooling sheet and get the farmer to pool his tobacco, and oh, how those noble men did work for two years, riding through all kinds of weather without a cent of pay, just for the good of the cause. So after the signing the farmers into local unions and electing their officers, one member from each precinct was a member of the board of control, and our board was elected. A president—he to represent the county at the meetings at Winchester. After several meetings of the board at Winchester, comes the real picture in the scene, the other being only the background.

Mr. C. LeBus, president in the chair, Mr. Hanna having resigned, realized the great responsibility of the office, he resigned that younger man might be elected, and he recommended Mr. LeBus. Mr. LeBus and his board are assembled at their appointed place, ready to sign. Never a more noble or a more determined set of men ever met together. Possibly excepting the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and this was similar. The Independence of the tobacco growers of the Burley belt. Mr. LeBus arose and made the statement: "Gentlemen, we have sent a cent of money to carry on this work; we have all been paying our own expenses, coming to the meetings, board bills, &c., and we are still willing to do this, but we must have money to buy postage stamps, pay clerk hire, &c. Now is the crucial time. The A. T. Co. is refusing to buy our tobacco, and we must sign notes to the amount of $20,000 or give up this fight. Our clerks will have to be paid. Like the true sons of our noble forefathers they signed the declaration, they put their names to $10,000 worth of notes, making each one of them responsible for $10,000. They were afraid of them, so they borrowed the money wherever they could get it, some of the members of the board loaning some of the money.

So things ran on for six months, notes came due, no money to pay an empty treasury. So they had to borrow another $10,000 making $20,000 each member of the board was responsible for, and while these men were making such sacrifices to help make the price for tobacco, the farmers were dumping their tobacco on the market, furnishing ammunition to the enemy. So the A. T. Co. were getting enough of this dumped tobacco to run on and they were still refusing to buy the pooled tobacco, claiming they had enough to last them for three years. So late in the winter of 1907 or early winter of 1908, the Burley Society met in session, they up and stop and make a list of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent interest on what remains a year, or three per cent for what remains six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. Co. sent them word they would take the tobacco at 17 cents and pay the $3 outrage fee, and would buy the 1908 crop and take one half of it in winter condition. So the word went forth—the telephone and the telephone lines were kept busy—the mail was too slow—"OUR TOBACCO IS SOLD," and such rejoicing was never known among the farmers, merchants and hog and went up all kinds everywhere, fish fries, burgeois, speech making—such a time was never known. Prices of hogshead as outrage fee, a fee that one farmer in one hundred did not know the purchaser had to pay for the tobacco. The farmers and tobacco dealers thought the warehouses only fleeced them but they were fleeing the other fellow to, that's why the A. T. Co. established warehouses of

Apple Culture.

You can double the value of your orchard in one year when properly treated.

Unusually early frosts, as a rule, are so because the soil is deficient in plant food.

Do not sell all of the best apples. If you are entitled to the best fruit produced on the farm it is the home family.

A commercial orchard must have its varieties selected to cover the season from the earliest to the latest.

The average farmer thinks that any sort of an old barrel will do for packing fruit. Hence one reason why farmers' apples are low in price.

Apples have been found to keep best when packed in paper, and though not overripe, picking should not be delayed till the fruit commences to fall.

CUT OUT TOBACCO.

On account of the failure of the pool which was caused by the failing to get into the pool enough of the 1909 crop the price has gone too low to encourage production. Already many of our farmers who own land have expressed a determination to cut out the crop and many will raise it only to cultivate a few corners to clean the farm and to give themselves employment during odd times. Many of the farmers in our county have gotten to the point that they do not have to raise the weed as they are out of debt and will put their farms in grass and will raise what they eat and live easy.

The buyers who promised to buy the tobacco in Missouri and other places are failing to keep their promise since they can buy the crop grown in Kentucky so low and it serves their purpose as much better. So those who have bought farms in other states and engaged in the business of growing tobacco will quit and cut out tobacco growing entirely. The upper counties cannot afford to quit raising stock and grow tobacco at the present low prices and the tobacco crop will be curtail.

SYNOPSIS.

Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the ship "Typhoon," lands secretly on Bear Island, stronghold of the Mormons. Obadiah Price, Mormon councilor, contrives to catch him in a trap, and, after a long and desperate struggle, kills him. Plum is buried by a solemn oath to deliver a message to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. Near Price's cabin, Plum finds the body of a young woman who has disappeared in the darkness, leaving an odor of blood. It develops that she was the daughter of a Mormon, and that she had been taken to the island by the Mormons. Plum finds the body of a young woman who has disappeared in the darkness, leaving an odor of blood. It develops that she was the daughter of a Mormon, and that she had been taken to the island by the Mormons.

"Strang—the king!" cried the old man, clutching the knob of his cane with both hands. "She has gone!" "Gone!" exclaimed Nathaniel. For what instant his heart bounded with delight. Marion was on her way to the castle! He sprang back to the door. "When? When did she go?" "The woman had come forward, her hands trembling, her lips quivering. Something in the terror of her face sent the hot blood from Nathaniel's cheeks. "They sent for her an hour ago," she said. "The king sent Obadiah Price for her. O, my God!" she shrieked suddenly, clutching at her breast. "Tell me—what are they doing with Marion?"

"Shut up!" snarled the old man. "That's Strang's business. She has gone to Strang. With an effort he straightened himself until his towering form rose half a head above Nathaniel. "She has gone to the king," he repeated. "Tell Strang that she will be there tonight, as she has promised!"

In spite of his effort to control himself a terrible cry burst from Nathaniel's lips. He lunged open the door and stood for an instant with his white face turned back.

"She went to the castle—an hour ago!" he cried.

"Yes, to the castle—with Obadiah Price."

The last words followed him as he sped out into the night. As swiftly as a wolf he raced across the tundra to the trail that led down to St. James. Something seemed to have burst in his brain; something that was not blood, but a mad desire to reach Strang. To grip him by the throat, to mete out to him the vengeance of a fiend instead of that of a man. His was a fate to save Marion! His brain thrummed with the thought. Too late—too late—too late. He panted the words. They came with every gasp for breath. Too late! Too late! His heart pumped like an engine as he strained to keep up his speed. He passed a man and a boy hurrying with their rifles to St. James and made no answer to their shout; a galloping horse forged ahead of him and he tried to keep up with it; and then, at the top of the long hill that sloped down to the stronghold of the Mormon kingdom something seemed to sweep his legs from under him, and he fell panting on the ground. For a few moments he lay there, looking down upon the city. The great bell at the temple was now silent. He saw huge fires burning for a mile along the coast, hundreds of lights were twinkling in the harbor, there came up to him softly, subdued by distance, the sound of commotion and excitement far below.

His eyes rested on the beacon above the prophet's home, burning like a ball of fire over the black canopy of trees. Marion was there! He rose to his feet again and went on, resolute and fearless, returning to him—telling him that he was about to play again. He took one of them by the hand, his whole being throbbing with excitement. It was Marion's shoe—fastened with red and torn as he lay even in the forest. With her face falling from his lips in a pleading cry he saw searched the room and he was dead in front of the mirror.

the Mormons to arms and the preparations for the defense would Strang, the master of the kingdom, the bulwark of his people, waste precious time in carrying out the purpose for which he had sent for Marion? Hardly did hope burn in his breast when there came another thought to quench it. Why had the king sent for Marion on this particular night and at this late hour? Why, unless at the approach of the great peril, had he feared that he might lose his beautiful victim, and in his overmastering passion had called her to him even as his people assembled in defense of his kingdom?

There was desperate coolness in Nathaniel's approach now. Whatever had happened he would do what he had threatened to do—kill Strang. And whatever had happened he would take Marion away with him if it was only her dead body that he carried in his arms. To do these things he needed strength. He advanced more slowly and drew deeper and deeper drafts of air into his exhausted lungs. At the edge of the great courtyard the castle he paused to listen. For the first time it occurred to Nathaniel that the prophet might have assembled some of his fighters to the defense of his harem, which he knew would be one of the first places to feel the vengeance of the outraged man of the mainland. But he heard no voices ahead of him. There were no fires to betray the approach of the enemy. Not even the barking of a dog gave warning of his stealthy advance. Soon he could make out a light in the king's house. A few steps more, and he saw that the door was open, as he had been on his first visit to the castle. He dodged swiftly from bush to bush, darted under the window through which he had seen Marion, leaped lightly up the broad steps and sprang into the great room, his pistol cocked in his hand.

The room was empty. He listened, but not a sound came to his ears except the rustling of a curtain and the hissing of a lamp. The five doors leading from the room were tightly closed. Nathaniel held his breath, tried to still the tumultuous pounding of his heart as he waited for a sound of life—a step beyond those doors, a woman's voice, a child's cry. But none came. The stillness of desertion hovered about him. He went to one of the five doors. It was not locked. He opened it silently, with the caution of a thief, and there loomed before him a chaos of gloom.

"Hello!" he called gently. "Hello—Hello—"

There was no answer. He struck a match and advanced step by step, holding the yellow bit of flame above his head. It disclosed the narrow walls of a hall and an open door leading into another room. The match sputtered and went out and he lighted another. On a little table just outside the door was a half-burned candle and he replaced his match with this. Then he went in.

At a glance he knew that he had entered a woman's room, redecorated with the perfume of flowers. On one side was a bed and close beside it a cradle with a child's toys scattered about it. The tumbled coverlets showed that both had been recently used. About the room were thrown articles of wearing apparel; a trunk had been dragged from a closet and was half-packed; everywhere was the disorder of hurried flight. For a few moments the depth of his despair held Nathaniel motionless. The castle was deserted—Marion was gone! He ran back into the great room, no longer trying to still the sound of his footsteps, and opened a second door. The same silence greeted him, the same disorder, the same evidence that the wives and children of the Mormon king had fled. He went into a third room—and then a fourth.

For an instant he paused at the threshold of this fourth chamber. A light was burning in the room at the end of the hall. The door was closed with the exception of an inch or two. "Marion!" he called softly, and listened intently. He went on when there was no reply, and pushed open the door. A candle was burning on a stand in front of a mirror. The room was empty as the empty sea. But there was no disorder here. The bed was unused, the garments in the open closet had not been disarranged. On the floor beside the bed was a pair of shoes and as Nathaniel saw them his heart seemed to leap to his throat and stand there as the rest of his body. He took one of them by the hand, his whole being throbbing with excitement. It was Marion's shoe—fastened with red and torn as he lay even in the forest. With her face falling from his lips in a pleading cry he saw searched the room and he was dead in front of the mirror.

and crumpled. It was Marion's shoe—the one he had seen last in her hand, and he crushed it to his lips as he ran to the great room, calling out her name again and again in the torture of helplessness that now possessed him.

Mechanically, rather than with reason he went to the fifth and last door. His candle had become extinguished in his haste and after he had opened the door he stepped at the threshold of the black hall to light it again. There was a moment's pause as he searched his pockets for a match, a silence in which he listened as he searched, and suddenly as he was about to strike the sulphur tip against there came to his ears a sound that held him chained to the spot. It was the sobbing of a woman; or was it a child? In a moment he knew that it was a woman; and then the sobbing ceased.

There was nothing but darkness ahead of him; no ray of light, none under the door; the chamber itself was in utter gloom. As quietly as possible he relighted his candle. A glance assured him that this hall was different from the others; it was deeper, and there were two doors at the end instead of one. Through which of these doors had come the sound of sobbing he had heard?

He approached and listened. Each moment added to his excitement, his fears, his hopes, but at last he opened the door on the left. The room was empty; there was the same disorder as before, the same signs of hurried flight. It was the room on the right! His heart almost stopped at his beating as he placed his hand on the latch, lifted it, and pulled the door in. Kneeling beside the bed he saw a woman. She had turned toward the light and in the dim illumination of the room Nathaniel recognized the beautiful face he had seen at the king's castle the preceding day—the face of the woman who had sent him to find the prophet, who had placed her gentle hand on Marion's head as he had looked through the window. There was no fear in her eyes as she saw Nathaniel. Something more terrible than that which shone in their glorious depths as she rose to her feet and stood before him, her face lined with grief, her mouth twitching in agony. She stood with clenched hands, her bosom rising and falling in the passion of the storm with her; and she sobbed even as Nathaniel had sobbed in the presence of this sudden presence of a distress greater than his own; sobbed in a choking, tearless way, waiting for him to speak.

"Forgive me," he spoke gently. "I have come for—Marion." He felt that he had no reason to lie to this woman. His face betrayed his own anguish as he caught his breath. "I want Marion," he repeated. "My God, won't you tell me—?"

She struggled to calm herself as he spoke the girl's name. "Marion is not here," she said. She crushed his hands against her bosom and a softer look came into her eyes; her voice was low and sweet, as it had been the morning he asked for Strang. As she gave the despair deepening in the man's face a great pity swept over her and she stretched out her arms to him with an aching cry, "Marion is gone—gone—gone," she moaned, "and you must go, too. O, I know you love her—she told me that you loved her, as I love Strang, my king! We have both lost—lost—and you must go—as I shall go!" She turned away from him with a cry so heart-breaking in its pain that Nathaniel felt himself trembling to the soul. In another instant she had faced him again, fighting back a strange calm into her face. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

HIS OLD FATHER SATISFIED

Discouraged Young Doctor's Free Dispensary Work Opens Old Man's Eyes.

Twenty years ago a discouraged young doctor in one of our large cities was visited once by his old father, who came up from a rural district to look after his boy.

"Well, son," he said, "how are you getting along?"

"I'm not getting along at all," was the disheartened answer. "I'm not doing a thing."

The old man's countenance fell, but he spoke of courage and patience and perseverance. Later in the day he went with his son to the "free dispensary," where the young doctor had an unalarmed position, and where he spent an hour or more every day.

The father sat by, a silent but intensely interested spectator, while twenty-five poor unfortunate received help. The doctor forgot his visitor while he bent his whole energy to his task; but hardly had the door closed on the last patient, when the old man burst forth:

"I thought you told me that you were not doing anything! Why, if I had helped twenty-five people in a month as much as you have in one day, I would have been a doctor in my life counted for something."

McLean Met His Match. John R. McLean stepped in front of a lurching Irishman one evening and obstructed the sidewalk so that the Irishman was obliged to stop and look at him. McLean said: "Here's that half dollar I borrowed of you. Now you must quit telling the neighbors that I never pay my debts."

Half drunk, and wholly dazed, the Irishman took a silver piece, looked at it intently and then said: "Be d, yes, you can't get off that way. I 'wor a whole dollar that you borrow; so fork over."

And he forked over another half dollar, and went his way, laughing heartily at the quick wit of the Irishman.—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

Doctors More Thorough. A physician at a dinner in Denver sneered at certain Biblical miracles. "Lazarus," he said, "was raised from the dead—and yet I don't see any dead folks being raised in our time."

"No," said Rev. Herbert H. Tresham, the Biblical scholar, with a smile. "Modern medical science has progressed too far for that, eh?"—Washington Star.

BABY'S SCALP CRUSTED

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been afflicted by such a disease. We used no other treatment after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1905."

Hardly a Compliment. In the excitement of the moment public speakers often say the opposite of what they mean to convey, and "when Henry Irving gave a reading in the Ulster hall, in 1878," says Bram Stoker, in "Personal Reminiscences of Henry Irving," "one speaker made a mistake in his private life as could be found, though the hall is generally supposed to belong to other provinces than the hard-headed Ulster. In descending on the many virtues of the guest of the evening he mentioned the excellence of his moral nature and rectitude of his private life in these terms: "Mr. Irving, sir, is a gentleman what leads a life of unbroken blemish."

Local Happenings.

Christmas comes on Sunday this year.

The calendar season is near at hand again.

The first snow of the season was in no apparent hurry to leave.

Assessor T. O. Willis completed his official work in Burlington precinct last week.

Those who had also filled that fall are beginning to realize the benefits to be derived therefrom.

December came in on snow shoes, the first day thereof being genuine, old fashioned winter weather.

Rabbits have not been brought to the local market this season in as large numbers as they were last.

Mrs. Sallie Calmes, of Bullittsville, has her farm advertised for sale. She will sell it at a bargain.

Callers at the sheriff's office this week are not so numerous as they were the closing week of November.

The unpaid school tax in Union Graded School district must be paid at once. This is the last appeal. J. L. Frazier, Treas.

Children are beginning to lay awake at night studying about Santa Claus and his well established generosity.

Wingate & Thompson.

To harvest the extra large corn crop of Missouri this fall, farmers are sending out a call for a large number of farm hands. It is estimated that upwards of 5,000 men will be required to garner in the harvest, reckoned on the average of the heaviest in years.

The tobacco growers of Brown county, Ohio, are circulating a petition to cut out the 1911 crop. There are no buyers in that county for the 1911 crop and the growers think it would be foolish to put out another crop until the present one is sold.

Many persons find themselves afflicted with a persistent cough after an attack of influenza. As this cough can be promptly cured by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, it should not be allowed to run on until it becomes troublesome. Sold by all dealers.

One of The Coldest on Record.

The weather boys located at Cincinnati reports that month as one of the four coldest November's since the establishment of the weather bureau in that city in 1871, and finds that it was one of the coldest Novembers on record, it being equaled in 1872, 1892 and 1903.

Lawrenceburg's New Clock.

After considerable delay the big town clock arrived Saturday from Thomaston, Conn. It will soon be installed in place of the old one. It will be a great public improvement for the city. The clock will begin to tick the time away Sunday morning, Dec. 3rd. The new clock will be dedicated with elaborate services. This bell, which weighs 3500 pounds, is of pure brass and is of the finest quality. It will be placed in the tower by James Liddle and his force of helpers. The old bell will toll fifty times for the new one. The tower is owned by Lawrenceburg—Lawrenceburg Press.

A Dangerous Crossing.

The very serious accident that befell Fred Wahl and young Ritchey, a few days since, is another occurrence at the crossing of the railroad at Anderson's Ferry that emphasizes the need of some protection for the public against accidents at that point. There have been quite a number of accidents there, and never have they been so numerous as following the crossing. To prevent them, a flagman ought to be on duty on their part. The crossing is at a point from which an approaching train can be seen only a short distance, and when approaching at the very high rate of speed at which trains move, it is impossible for the driver to make the crossing in time to be caught. The public ought to make such an emphatic demand for proper protection at Anderson's Ferry that the railroad will heed it and locate a watchman there.

Bonar-Tanner Wedding.

On Thanksgiving eve in the presence of a circle of relatives and friends occurred one of the prettiest home weddings ever solemnized in this neighborhood, when Louis Bonar, the pretty daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Tanner, became the bride of Mr. Thos. Bonar. At seven thirty to the time of Mendleson's Wedding March played by Mrs. Fannie Clut-buck, the bride and bridesmaid, Miss Bessie Helm, entered the softly lighted parlor, followed by the bridesmaids, Mrs. Rufus Tanner, who were met by Mr. R. H. Tanner, who performed the impressive ceremony. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party retired to the dining room where an excellent repast consisting of every delicacy of the season was served, and the youthful couple received the congratulations of the guests. The bride was dressed in blue messaline silk and carried bride's roses. The bridesmaid's dress was ashes of rose. The groom wore the conventional black. The parlor and dining room were beautifully decorated with chrysanthemums, smilax and ferns. The following is a partial list of the presents received: Mr. and Mrs. F. Tanner, lamp; Mr. and Mrs. Ben Mitchell, set silver knives and forks; Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Ayler, gold lined berry spoon; Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Ayler, silver berry spoon; Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Robert Mallory Dead.

Robert G. Mallory, son of H. D. and Malvina Mallory, was born at Burlington, Ky., April 22, 1872, and died at his home in Petersburg, Ky., Nov. 20th, 1910, aged 38 years, 8 months and 28 days. The services were conducted by Rev. Crutcher and the remains were laid to rest in the Petersburg cemetery. He leaves one brother and five sisters, a wife and one son, aged six years, to mourn his loss.

Sleep on, dear brother, thy work is over, whose faithful hands need toil no more. One day has passed away, we hope to meet you some day. Alas! the dark within our dwelling, lonely are our hearts to day, for the one we loved so dearly has forever passed away. Heaven now has got its treasure and earth the lonely casket keeps, but the sunbeams will always linger where our dear brother sleeps, sweet and peaceful, his religion God has called for you home, he alone knows best and his will be done. Forever.

CARD OF THANKS.—I wish to thank my kind friends and neighbors for their kindness during the sickness of my husband, and for their services at the cemetery, and Mr. Stearns, undertaker, for the kind manner in which he conducted the funeral.

"FROM NATURE TO MAN."

Is the Title of a Book of Which The Author is A Boone County Boy.

The Hampden Publishing Company, Springfield, Mass., has the following to say of the book, "FROM NATURE TO MAN" written by Rev. Charles Chambers Conner, many years ago one of the founders of the Boone County Recorder: "From Nature to Man" is not a science treatise, but is nearly all in narrative form, and makes easy reading. The purity of the author's English has been practically unimpaired, and his readable degree of liking for poetry of expression in prose, and has combined moral lessons with incident and description. There are two mountain stories and another chapter on mountains among the narratives, yet no phrase is repeated or no thought but is differently developed in each.

AN OCTOGENARIAN.

Andrew C. Passons, a Former Boone County Citizen, Dies At Aurora, Ind.

Andrew C. Passons, aged and respected citizen of Aurora, born in Boone County, Kentucky, June 24, 1827, died Monday, Nov. 28, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mattie Buckner, on Main street, at the age of eighty-three years, five months and eight days. Mr. Passons was united in marriage to Elizabeth Robinson, May 20, 1855, in Boone County, and to this union eleven children were born, of whom three daughters and five sons, together with the wife, survive him.

Funeral services were held from the residence Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. Rev. W. S. Reister officiating and the remains taken to Petersburg, Ky., for burial—Aurora Bulletin.

The joint session of the County Medical Association and the Boone Literary Society on the evening of the 18th inst., will be a very interesting affair, no doubt, as no labor is being spared to make it a grand success.

The greatest danger from influenza is of its resulting in pneumonia. This can be obviated by using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, as it not only cures influenza, but counteracts any tendency of the disease towards pneumonia. Sold by all dealers.

Fine rains fell in this vicinity Sunday and Monday, and farmers got busy before daylight Monday morning bulking down their crops. But the rains brought in condition to handle. The thoroughly damp spell means many thousands of dollars to the farmers of this section—Carrollton News.

9,420 Is Boone's Population. The census department gives Kentucky according to the recent enumeration a population of 2,289,908, an increase of 6.6 per cent in the last ten years. Boone county's population is 9,420 against 11,170 ten years ago, a loss of 16.8 per cent. The year 1900 was a little over 23 per cent in the last 30 years. Every county in this Congressional district shows a decrease in population, as does every county in this judicial district.

Heeds One Side Only.

A rural mail carrier writing to the Republic, says that if he hears a good deal about the cost of rural free delivery, but hears practically nothing about its profits. He admits that it is no easy matter to figure up the credit side of the business, but he makes a pretty fair showing.

The carrier says the number of pieces of mail matter handled since his route was established has increased from fewer than 3,000 to more than 4,000 a month. The number of pieces of mail collected is more than three times what it was at the beginning of the service. His route is twenty-two miles in length and he delivers twenty-four daily papers where no papers were taken out before. They would not be taken now if the routes were discontinued. Farm values have been increased and "white" is not easy to measure in dollars and cents as there is an increase in value to the service the fact that it exists makes the farms more marketable. He knows that there has been an increase in the number of farmers. Moreover, along his route there are a number of young men who have reached the ages of discretion and decision and who are remaining on the farm.

Admit they would not be there if present conditions were identical with those of ten years ago. That all the credit for this is due to rural free delivery he does not claim, but he thinks the rural mail route has been the important factor in the equation.

The rural mail service has tended to brighten home life on the farm, it has served to banish monotony, for the wives and daughters have their daily mail. They have their newspapers and magazines. In fact as a rule they know more about the world and its affairs than the city readers, for they read the newspapers thoroughly. The farmer and his sons are posted in county, state and federal affairs, they know the market prices every day. They know what is wanted and can take advantage of the varying demands for their crops and live stock. The rural mail service may cost a great deal, but it is the best investment the government has made in years.

Tobacco News.

Nicholas county tobacco is not grading as high this year as in the past.

This is one of the biggest crops ever raised in the Black Patch, and it is above the average in quality. Some planters are realizing as much as $85 an acre from their crop, and it will average $65 or $70 on good land.

The tobacco crop of Pendleton county has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. It is larger than was expected and of finer quality. Many crops have been delivered at the warehouse in Falmouth at prices ranging from 11 to 18 cents. Stripping is progressing rapidly.

A dispatch from Barboursville says the Knox county tobacco growers have begun to strip their tobacco. The crop this year, it is said, exceeds by five times the product of last year and reports from Clay and Laurel counties are that an equally large gain has been made. The quality this year is up to last year's high average and growers expect to realize a good price. Several buyers are looking over the crops.

The star district tobacco pool turned down an offer of 7 cents a pound that was made for its 20,000,000 pounds of tobacco, and is holding for 8 cents. If this price is not received the tobacco will be prized and probably held for even higher prices. Henderson, Hopkins, Union, Webster and Crittenden counties are interested in the pool. The Henderson county pool, which includes attending district insurgents, has sold 1,500,000 pounds for 7 cents.

Good Roads Congress.

The Elizabethtown News makes a good suggestion in the following article: There is going to be a good roads congress in Louisville in December, where the people who are in favor of better roads from all over Kentucky will meet and as a result it is to be hoped that there will grow out of it a measure which the Legislature will put into a law, making a great step forward for better highways. Why should it not be a good idea for the men and women of Kentucky to hold a great educational convention some time before the Legislature meets? Men and women who are not school teachers, and have no ax to grind, to discuss the crying need for better schools and to formulate plans to secure them subject to the approval of the Legislature. There are hundreds of people who are interested in having better district schools, who never go to Frankfort, but who would attend a great common school rally.

Wants To Help Some One.

For thirty years J. F. Barker, of Fertile, Mo., needed help and he couldn't find it. That's why he wants to help some one now. Suffering so long himself he feels for all distress from Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, Lassitude and Kidney disorders. He shows that Electric Bitters work wonders for such troubles. "Five bottles," he writes, "wholly cured me and now I am well and hearty." It's also positively guaranteed for Liver Trouble, Dyspepsia, Blood Disorders, Female Complaints and Malaria. Try them at Barker's drug store, Erlanger.

The Boone County Court will convene next Monday.

No More Hangs.

The old times barbarous way of inflicting the death penalty in Kentucky will soon be a thing of the past, as the work of installing the death chair at Eddyville penitentiary is going on steadily and will be ready for use in a few weeks. The electrocution law went into effect on June 1 and if a crime is committed after that time for which the death penalty is imposed the condemned man will be electrocuted. There has been a notable change made in the prison at Frankfort. The old penitentiary at that place will soon be converted into a reformatory and this is one of the principal reasons the death chair was located at Eddyville instead of Frankfort as it is handy, possible the death penalty will be inflicted in a reformatory. The Prison Commission will be ready in a few months to begin the transfer of the prisoners. All prisoners over thirty years of age will be taken to Eddyville and all under 30 will go to Frankfort. And, under this new law, all prisoners, no matter what crime, that meet the requirements as to conduct can be paroled and quite a number are now being granted.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

The teacher who is a live wire and a success has a great future in the educational field of today. The trustee who employs a teacher without first learning whether or not that teacher is qualified to do the work is responsible for the failure of the school and has helped to rob the children of the education they are entitled to. The parent should keep in close touch with the progress of his children in school and if they are making no progress he should see that the trouble is adjusted. A few hours study with the whole mind in attention upon the subject is worth a weeks study in the way it is carried on in many schools. The child who cannot tell something that he has learned during the day in school is certainly not learning much. To learn to be a good penman the student must spend at least two hours a day in practicing movement, etc.

Tobacco Poolers Sued.

The Burley Tobacco Society has found it necessary to sue three prominent farmers of Owen county for violating the pooling contract of 1909. The first was an injunction suit against W. J. Watson, and Hueti Sharron, his tenant. They prized and shipped to Cincinnati ten hogheads. The second suit was against Wm. Marston and he had about 75-100 pounds in his barn at that point. He had a contract with the Owen county Board of Control whereby the board was to take charge of his barn and prize the tobacco. After the board had prized about thirteen hogheads, Mr. Marston interfered with the grader and wanted to sidetrack the rest of the tobacco, saying that he proposed selling the tobacco himself over the bridge. An injunction was issued on him last Saturday, and the case is set for this coming Monday. The other suit is against V. B. Wilhoit, of Monterey, who was charged with $313.50 damages, fees and charges. Mr. Wilhoit shipped and sold forty-five hogheads of tobacco which the Society had prized in Wilhoit's barn near Monterey. News-Record said.

Saved From Awful Death.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. McDonald, of Fayetteville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 3. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "she was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day, as all remedies failed, till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and so completely cured her, that she has not been troubled with a cough since. Its best medicine I ever saw or heard of." For coughs, colds, laryngitis, asthma, croup, hemorrhage, all bronchial troubles, it has no equal. Mr. $1.00 Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Bentler's drug store Brainerd.

Coon Skins Scarce.

Where are all the coon hides? The commission merchants are asking this question, as the supply has taken a big slump during the last two or three years. There seems to be plenty of the little fur-bearing animals in the country according to the "coon hunters" who make the sport lively during the fall and winter but they don't show up at the local market places. There is undoubtedly a big shortage and Mr. Coon is disappearing. The fox, mink, weasel, pole cat, pole cat and possum hides, all show about the usual crop, with the coon skins very scarce.

What Brand Are You Drinking?

The wild animal written up in last week's issue of the Democrat, has made its appearance about one-half mile south of town. Tuesday evening it died away from the house of B. B. Waldrop. It was also in our city the same night, having attacked the dog of J. G. King on Sixth street. It was reported that in one part of the county it killed a cow. We have not heard from it in the last few days. -Carrollton Democrat

State News.

Cynthiana.—County Judge T. E. King set April 25 next as the date for holding the election on the liquor question in Cynthiana and Harrison county.

Cadiz.—The Farmers' Institute, which was held here this week by Messrs. W. H. Strange and W. H. Clayton, of the State Agricultural Department, was attended by small crowds, owing to some extent, to the bad weather. Those who were present, however, took much interest in the proceedings.

Eddyville.—The eleven convicts recently pardoned by Gov. Willson were given their freedom this morning and left on the noon train for Providence in company with a detachment of the State Militia, under command of Lieut. Lucas, of Bowling Green.

Henderson.—A church built in ten hours is the remarkable feat performed here. What was a vacant lot at 7 o'clock in the morning was transformed into an improved site by 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon. The structure which will be occupied by the Christian denomination, was erected, painted, seated inside and dedicated all within ten hours. The work was done by 150 men. The building is said to be the first of the kind ever commenced and completed the same day in the south.

Georgetown, Dec. 1.—In a case of State-wide interest Acting County Judge Mike H. Hargard today after hearing lengthy arguments of the opposing attorneys, dismissed the nine cases of the Commonwealth against the nine moonkeepers for want of jurisdiction. It was claimed that these men were violating the local option law which became operative upon the placing of the Court of Appeals mandate in the hands of the Circuit Clerk, by keeping spirituous liquors for the purpose of selling. The defendants claim that the mandate had not been legally filed, and the action of the "dry" in asking the Appellate court to hasten the decision so that the mandate might be filed in the October term of the Scott Circuit Court, because there would be no other session until February, was cited as support of the defense's contention that it must be filed in open court and because of this fact local option, they argued, had not become operative in Georgetown. The presiding Judge insisted that he had no jurisdiction and refused to hear further argument, dismissing all cases and leaving further action to Circuit Judge Stout, who he claims, only has jurisdiction in the matter, intimating that no business should be closed except by legal notice.

In Effect January 1.

When the last Legislature was in session it enacted a law regarding vital statistics or statistics of births and deaths. It is quite voluminous and covers a dozen or more pages of printed matter. Each incorporated city or town shall report the date, sex and other things to the Registrar. Where a person dies the undertaker must report the name, place of death and numerous other particulars to the Registrar. No sexton or undertaker is allowed to bury, cremate or place in a vault the body of any person without making the proper report under penalty of a fine, ranging from twenty to one hundred dollars. Each incorporated city or town shall be a separate district and Registrars shall be appointed also for the country districts. Printed blanks for these reports are to be provided by the State Board of Health. There are many other provisions of the law, but these are among the most prominent. The law goes into effect January 1st.

Thomas, and has established a fine reputation as an efficient discharge of his duties. Roy Stamler, who recently opened a pool parlor in the Walton opera house, gives the public a free use of the tables every Friday afternoon, and invites the ladies to enjoy the pleasures of the parlor every Friday afternoon. The Walton school was dismissed most of last week because of a defective heating system, the weather being too cold without proper heating. There are seven rooms in the building and part of them was so heated as to be able to resume the school work. Married—Tuesday afternoon, W. Baker Gatewood, and Miss Myrtle Waller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Waller, of Verona, at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. W. W. Evans near Walton. The groom is a son of Robert Gatewood, of Kyle, Gallatin county. Sunday evening somebody discharged a gun near the residence of A. Kirtley Johnson, and caused his horse to run away. The horse was hitched in a buggy and was tied to Mr. Johnson's mail wagon, he being the rural mail carrier, and the frightened animal succeeded in demolishing both vehicles. Roy D. Stamler, who recently opened a pool room in the Walton opera house, has added another table, making three tables in all, the extensive patronage justifying the addition. Mr. Stamler keeps everything in the nicest order and most attractive manner, making this harmless and convenient a pleasant means of whiling away an evening hour. W. T. S. Blackburn, cashier of the First National Bank, and Milo Bennett, publisher of the Grant County Record, the new paper recently instituted at Dry Ridge, spent last Saturday here in the interest of the paper, meeting with kindly patronage. The Record is a very neat paper, and Mr. Bennett is a pleasant gentleman of considerable practical experience. Rev. R. E. Moss, of Memphis, Tenn., who enjoyed a trip to the Holy Land, will deliver a lecture at Walton Christian church on Sunday evening, Dec. 10th, the subject being "Strange Sounds and Scenes in Jerusalem." As Rev. Moss is a famous and descriptive preacher, his sermon is expected to be a masterpiece, and will not doubt be a great success. The admission is free, and children under 10 years of age are admitted free. The proceeds will be for the Christian mission fund.

of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent interest on what remains a year, or three per cent for what repays six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. We qualify as administrator, executor, trustee, guardian, etc., of estates, which is a much more satisfactory than a private individual in such capacity. Mail communications given careful attention. Your patronage solicited.

Silver Lake Farm at Sherman, Grant county, from O. P. Schriber, a hardware manufacturer of Cincinnati, will take possession about March 1st, moving from his farm at Beaver Lick, which he sold to John Dehaunty, near Union. Mr. Moore is delighted with his new purchase. The farm contains 278 acres of fine land and the price was $16,000 cash. Everybody regrets Mr. Moore's departure from Boone county.

The directors of the Equitable Bank and Trust Company, at the regular meeting last Friday, declared its fifth semi-annual dividend of three per cent to its stockholders on the $50,000 capital stock. The bank has been in existence a little over three years, and the stockholders appear to be well pleased with the management of the institution and its earnings, and the patrons all speak kindly of their business relations with the bank. The bank has over 600 depositors.

Geo. L. Miller, of Big Bone Springs, one of the best live stock raisers in Boone county, shipped to the Cincinnati market last Friday the best bunch of steers that has been shipped from the county for a long time. They brought the top of the Cincinnati market and were commented on by all who inspected them as "top notch" and weighed over 1800 pounds. Mr. Miller accompanied the cattle to Cincinnati and spent Saturday here with his "grandson," Conner Carver, who drove up from Big Bone for him and also spent the day.

Miss Beatrice Preston, who resides with her brother, Frank Preston, of the Rev. Life Johnson farm, had the misfortune to lose one of her eyes. It became so severely and painfully affected that she was taken to a Cincinnati oculist, who advised the removal of the affected optic to preserve the other eye, and the operation was performed for several days but Miss Preston's suffering became so intense that it became necessary. She is now entirely relieved of the pain. The injured eye became affected years ago during her illness and has periodically given her very much trouble.

Walton Masonic Lodge conferred the Master's degree on Chas. S. Boies, of Richmond, at the regular meeting, last Friday night, when there was a good sized attendance and excellent work by the officers. The next meeting will be held St. John's Day, Tuesday, Dec. 27th, at 7 o'clock in the evening, for the election of officers for the ensuing year, and all of the members are urged to be present on that occasion. Remember "Tag Day," next Saturday, Dec. 10th, when the public school children, responding to the call for help from the Kentucky Children's Home will hold "tag day" in Walton, and contribute to the public generally for the purpose of assisting the little waifs of the State. It is a worthy object of public consideration, and the children of the schools have been solicited to raise funds to assist in defraying part of the expenses of conducting the Home at Louisville.

For Sale—Fine Jersey cow. Wm. O. Richey, Walton, Ky. (Walton News on first page).

Mrs. Mary Adams, widow of the late Rev. Samuel Adams, attempted to commit suicide Monday evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Julia Adams Rouse, by shooting herself in the breast four times with a 22 calibre revolver. There was no other member of the family at home at the time, and when Mrs. Rouse returned she found her mother lying in an unconscious condition in the basement of the house where she has her son.

She committed the deed. Mrs. Adams has been ill for some time and her mind became so impaired that she was taken to the Lakeland Insane Asylum for treatment, and on her last return from the asylum made her home with her daughter.

Mrs. Adams attempted suicide twice before but both attempts were frustrated by her relatives who kept a close watch on her actions. The death of her husband and some of her troubles seemed to prompt the desire to end her life. All of her people have been exceedingly kind and attentive to her, and there is no reason outside of her unbalanced mind for her rash act. She has some slight hopes of recovery, her condition at last accounts was very precarious. Mrs. Adams left three notes under the steps at the residence of Mrs. Houston, addressed to Mrs. Houston, W. R. Bouse and A. M. Edwards, which read: "When you find these I will probably be dead."

Ends Winter's Troubles.

To many, winter is a season of trouble. The frost bitten toes and fingers, chapped hands and lips; chilblains, cold sores, red and rough skin, prove this. But such troubles fly before Bucklen's Arnica Salve. A trial convinces it is the greatest healer of Burns, Eclis, Piles, Cuts, Sores, Scalds and sprains. Only 25c at Benlar's drug store, Erlanger.

Lost—Seven months old heifer. Information of its whereabouts will be gladly rewarded by Mrs. Ida Bailey, Bullittsville.

Church Dedicated.

The new Christian church building at Bullittsville was dedicated at Bullittsville last Sunday. Eighty-three days after the old church was burned the new one was ready for use.

Rev. Jas. W. Hagan, pastor of Fourth Street Christian church, Covington, had charge of the services. He was assisted by Rev. C. V. Brooks, pastor of Bullittsburg Baptist church, and Rev. Edgar C. Riley, pastor of the congregation that will occupy the new building.

The day was an ideal December day, and quite a large crowd was present. Dinner was served in the Grange Hall and at the residences of Joshua and Jas. Masters near by. The entire community contributed to the dinner, and no one was able to tell the difference between Baptist and Campbellite chicken.

The Bullittsville Christian church was organized in the Grange Hall at Bullittsville by Rev. W. S. Keene in December, 1879, and the old church building was dedicated in August, 1880. At one time the congregation was large, and great crowds attended the services. Many who have been pastors of this church are now among the leading ministers of the Disciples. The following have preached for this church: W. S. Keene, Robert Graham, W. J. Howe, A. Brown, W. McGarvey, E. J. Curry, G. W. Watkins, Edgar D. Jones, Milo Atkinson, Henry R. Pritchard, and many others. This organization may be movement.

In recent years, by deaths and removals, this congregation has lost much of its strength. It is to other men of the Pastorators able, in the future, to occupy a strong position in the moral development of the county.

People in Wolfe county think they have found silver. It was lost 150 years ago in Kentucky mountains. The Rev. William Spencer, who lives a few miles north-west of Camp-ton, found specimens of ore on his farm that sparkle and glitter like nuggets or chunks of silver. The article exhibited looked to be a conglomerate of iron, manganese, copper, glass and mica. Spencer says metals are to be found in abundance throughout his section.

Read all the Christmas advertisements in the issue.

(Falmouth Pendletonian.)
As the bee industry in Pendleton county is becoming one of real importance and value it naturally follows that all who are interested in the busy bee should be up and doing, alert to obtain all the information possible bearing on the subject. With this aim in view a meeting of the bee men of Pendleton county was held at the courthouse in Falmouth on Monday.

(Elizabethtown News.)
Will L. Nail was in town Wednesday from Kosmosdale. While in the News office he related a very interesting and remarkable story about two hogs which he killed at home a few days ago. One of them bore the name of Old King and had taken many premiums at the county, as well as State fairs. He was a Duroc Jersey and tipped the beam at 1,000 pounds. The other weighed about 500 pounds. Now Mr. Nail is authority for the statement that over 500 pounds of lard was rendered from this pair of porkers.

The peculiar properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy have been thoroughly tested during epidemics of influenza, and when it was taken in time we have not heard of a single case of pneumonia. Sold by all dealers.

Mike Utz, colored, born in Florence in 1845, died at his home near Idlewild on the 9th inst., aged 52 years, 7 months and 13 days. He leaves a wife, six daughters, two sons, and several relatives. He was buried last Sunday.

If you want to spend a few hours very pleasantly next Saturday night don't fail to attend the entertainment, "Just for Fun," given by Miss Ella Talliferro, of Erlanger. She is a graduate of Miss Scheuster and has drilled the young ladies and gentlemen who will assist her. Between acts there will be club-swinging and recitation. The entire program will be interesting. Come out.

For some time several of the patrons of the local box-alley were about equal in their scores, but one night last week James Slayback topped the party by tearing off 408, which he declared could not be reached by any of the boys, and his score owing to the very long standing of those considerably below, looked good to the boys, but on the night following Slayback's high rolling, Kirk Tanner did not do a thing but tie him, and they are now known as Burlington's pair of high-rollers.

Wants To Help Some One.

For thirty years J. F. Boyer, of Fertile, Mo., needed help and he couldn't find it. This is why he wants to help some one now. Suffering as long himself he feels for all distress from Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, Lamehood and Kidney disorders. He shows that Electric Bitters work wonders for such troubles. "Five bottles," he writes, "wholly cured me and now I am well and hearty." It's also positively guaranteed for Liver Trouble, Dyspepsia, Blood Disorders, Female Complaints and Malaria. Try them for at Bentler's drug store, Erlanger.

Circuit Court.

Very few other than those summoned as grand jurors attended the opening ceremonies of the December term of Circuit Court, last Monday. Judge J. W. Cammack and Commonwealth's Attorney E. E. Winn were on the ground at 8 a. m. and the organization of the grand jury was commenced. It is composed of the following gentlemen:

John Hogan, Constance; Jas. D. Acra, Burlington; Malchus Southern, Constance; G. W. Sandford, Burlington; Bernard Rogers, Bellevue; Courtney Walton, Petersburg; J. S. Surace, Florence; W. P. Cropper, Bullittville; Geo. Stevenson, Union; Ben Stephens, Florence; Jake Cleek, Walton; Chas. Mason, Florence. Having given the jury the usual charge, the court appointed Malchus Southern, foreman. The petit jurors for the term are composed of the following gentlemen:

No. 1—Lon Clure, A. G. Wilson, W. E. Dixon, Sam Wilson, J. D. Moore, R. T. Stephens, E. K. Stephens, Ezra Blankenbaker, Alie Stith, S. S. Smilo, Robt. Rice, E. E. Utz.

No. 2—Cad Sullivan, John S. Taylor, S. W. Taylor, J. H. Newman, Chas. Wolfe, G. M. Allen, Robt. Huey, Ed Moore, Wm. Acra, J. P. Blyth, Frank Bohanan, Chas. Finn. Attorneys, Hons. W. W. Dickerson, of Cincinnati; J. S. Gaunt, of Louisville; E. E. Winn, of Warsaw; Judge Tomlin and John L. Vest, of Walton, and O. M. Rogers, of Erlanger, are looking after business in court.

Up to yesterday about all the indictments for selling pooled tobacco had been settled. The Commonwealth is taking a line against each party for $15, which, with the cost will amount to about $35. None of the civil suits growing out of the sales had been put on the market. Court will adjourn tomorrow, there being two or three important cases set for trial with an effort will be made to dispose of at this term. One or two of them have been continued several times.

Mrs. Cook, of Baltimore, Md., is attending circuit court, looking after a claim she has presented against the estate of the late C. W. Jenkins, of Petersburg. The grand jury expects to adjourn to-day. The case of J. W. Cleek against W. E. Vest was continued until next term. Fines assessed at this term will amount to about $200. It is very strange that people will not learn that grand juries pay no attention to anonymous communications.

Wednesday was a cool day, as about all the snow had been melted.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. C. McDonald, of Payetteville, N. C. R. F. D. No. 8. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "she was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day. they rose above the pistol to the fact behind it. For fifteen seconds there was a strange terrible silence as the eyes of the two men met. In the quarter of a minute Nathaniel knew that he had not guessed rightly. Strang was not afraid. He would not tell him where Marion was. The superable courage of this man made Captain Plum and unconsciously his finger fell upon the trigger of his pistol. He almost shrieked the words that he meant to speak calmly: "Where is Marion?"

"She is safe, Captain Plum. She, where the friends who are invading us from the mainland will have a chance of saving her."

The Business Principle

of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent. interest on what remains a year, or three per cent. for what repays six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. We qualify as administrator, executor, trustee, guardian, etc., of estates, which is much more satisfactory than a private individual in such capacity. Mail communications given careful attention. Your patronage solicited.

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN WORSE.

(Courier-Journal, Oct. 1.)

About the best that can be said for the census report for Kentucky, taking it as a whole, is that it might have been worse. The official figures as given out by the Census Bureau Monday show that the population of the State is 2,139,908. This is an increase of 146,731, over 1900, when the population was 2,043,174. The percentage of increase is 6.8.

Forty counties have lost in population, and in most of these the loss is not inconsiderable. Conspicuous among these are several counties in the far-famed Blue Grass region and a large number of the counties bordering on the Ohio river. Of the seventy-nine which show gains, several have barely held their own. The most notable increases are in the counties containing the larger cities and in the mountains, where industrial development is swelling the population. Twenty-five counties border in whole or in part on the Ohio River and fifteen of these show a decline. Of the Ohio River counties which made gains the most notable are Jefferson, which includes the city of Louisville; Kenton, which contains the city of Covington; Campbell, in which is located the city of Newport; McCracken, which embraces the city of Paducah; Davies, wherein is situated the city of Owensboro; and Boyd, which has the twin cities of Ashland and Cattleburg. The most surprising feature in the showing of these river counties is the decrease of population in Henderson, which includes the city of Henderson, and in Mason, which includes the city of Mayfield.

There are, of course, a good many surprises in the returns, as is always the case. Viewed in a general way the most gratifying feature of the census is the splendid showing made by the mountain counties. Some notable examples of these are Bell county, which almost doubled its population; Whitley, which made a gain of 6,967; Knox, which gained 4,744; Breathitt, which despite its bloody record, gained 3,218; Pike, which gained 3,893; Pulaski, which increased 4,883; Floyd, which increased 3,071; Johnson, which increased 3,752; Morgan, which gained 3,467; Greenup, which increased 3,043; and Boyd, which increased 4,610.

All of the nineteen counties in the Eleventh district made gains in population. The Eleventh district includes the most of what are known as the "remote counties," but without a single exception these counties have shown that they are on the upward move. Some of them have not a single mile of railroad within their borders and yet have made a splendid gain where bigger and older and wealthier counties have shown a decline. Some examples of the counties having no railroads which have made notable increases are calculated as follows: Wayne, 2,626; Russell, 1,166; Leslie, 2,224; Clay, 2,425 and Letcher, 1,451. Some of these counties have the prospect of securing railroads at an early date, and as they are all rich in mineral wealth they will make rapid strides in the next decade. No other congressional district contains so many counties as the Eleventh, but no other district in the State makes so uniform a showing of gain, with the exception of the Fifth, which contains the single county of Jefferson.

The Tenth district also is largely made up of the mountain counties. It has sixteen counties and all of them made gains except three. Elliot, Menifee and Powell show a falling in. Of these three is without a mile of railroad. In the same district the wealthy county of Clark, which contains the city of Winchester, shows a gain of only 1,293. Her sister county, Montgomery, with Mt. Sterling as the county seat, shows a gain of only thirty-four. These two are not mountain counties, and taking the district in its entirety the mountain counties have made much better progress than their Bluegrass neighbors. Notable gainers in this district are Pike, Floyd, Johnson, Morgan and Breathitt. Knott, which has no railroad, gained 2,207; Wolfe, which is poorly supplied in that particular, made an increase of 1,400; Martin, also without railroads, gained 1,531.

The Ninth district includes 13 counties, and here, as in the Tenth district, the notable gains are in the mountains. Those which increased in population are Boyd, Carter, Greenup, Lawrence and Rowan, while there was a decrease in Bath, Bracken, Fleming, Harrison, Lewis, Mason, Nicholas and Robertson. It might be remarked just here that all of the counties in this district that show a decline, with the exception of Lewis, were scenes of night-riding outbreaks during the tobacco troubles.

There is one mountain county in the Eighth district. It is Rockcastle and it looms up conspicuously among the other nine counties which compose the district. It gained 2,210 in population. Madison, which includes the city of Richmond, gained only 1,344, and Boyle, which includes Danville, gained only 881. Anderson gained only 94; Jessamine 688, and Lincoln 838. Garrard, Mercer, Shelby and Spencer all decreased.

Coming on down the State the next district in order is the Seventh, the heart of the Bluegrass. It is composed of ten counties, and the only one of them to show a substantial gain is Fayette, which includes the city of Lexington. Fayette, Fayette and Franklin, which includes the Capital City of Frankfort, gained only 283. The other counties are Bourbon, Henry, Oldham, Owen, Scott and Woodford, and all show a loss in population. The most remarkable decline is in Owen, where the loss is 3,306.

There are but eight counties in the Sixth congressional district. They are Boone, Campbell, Carroll, Gallatin, Grant, Kenton, Jessamine, and Trimble. All of them lost in population with the exception of Kenton and Campbell, which contain the cities of Covington and Newport. Kenton gained 6,740 and Campbell gained 5,146. The effect of the "tobacco war" is seen here, as all the counties are burley-growing territory, and the losses are heavy. Pendleton heading the list with 4,893. Boone lost 1,736; Carroll 1,718; Gallatin, 466; Grant, 4,658 and Trimble 760.

Jefferson county comprises the Fifth district and includes Louisville, the State's largest city. The total gain in the county is 26,371, not so big as it ought to be, perhaps, but a gratifying indication that Jefferson is not standing still or going backward. There are thirteen counties in the Fourth district—Breckinridge, Bullitt, Grayson, Green, Hardin, Hart, Larned, Marion, Meade, Nelson, Ohio, Taylor and Washington. Seven of these lost in population, while six gained. The biggest loss, 762, was sustained by Meade and the biggest gain, 886, was in Taylor. Ohio county, which has extensive coal-mining interests, gained only 355, which is probably the most surprising feature of the district's returns. There was a loss of as much as 5,000 population in the Fourth district.

Ten counties compose the Third district, and four of them lost in population—Butler by 81; Logan by 1,017; Simpson by 164, and Todd by 883. One county, Muhlenberg, made a remarkable gain of 7,837, and thereby established a record for all the territory west of Louisville. Muhlenberg has many coal mines and included in its borders are Central City, Greenville and other thriving towns. Barren county gained 3,496. Warren county, including the city of Bowling Green, gained only 609. Allen gained but 225; Edmonson 389; Metcalfe 465.

Of the eight counties in the Second district, five gained in population. Hopkins made the best record with 3,296. Hopkins is the biggest coal-mining county in the State, and has the growing towns of Madisonville, Eastington, Dawson Springs and others. Davies county, with Owensboro as its chief city, made a poorer showing with a gain of 3,353. Christian, which includes the city of Hopkinsville, did worse with a gain of only 883. McLean gained 793 and Webster 877. Henderson made a big loss, 3,555, in spite of the fact that the city of Henderson apparently is prosperous and growing. Union, with extensive coal mines and important towns, lost 1,410 and Hancock lost 402.

The First district embraces 13 counties, eight of which lie west of the Tennessee River and constitute what is known as Jackson's Purchase. The Purchase makes a fair showing. Only four counties in the district lost in population and three of them are east of Tennessee River. Caldwell lost 447; Crittenden lost 1,148, and Livingston 737. Carter is the only Purchase county showing a decline, lost 1,057. Crittenden, it may be added, is the center of the hopper industry. It was also prolific of night-riding troubles. Lyon made a gain of only 104, despite the fact that only one of the State's prisons is located at Eddyville, its county seat. Hickman appears to be standing pat, it recording a bare gain of five. Paducah is one of the biggest counties in the State and contains the city of Mayfield, but its gain is only 335. Fulton is one of the smallest, but records an increase of 2,268. It has the towns of Fulton and Hickman, both "sizable" and prospering. Trigg county's gain of 448 is not what it should have been. McCracken, having the city of Paducah within its boundaries, naturally makes a good increase, the figures being 4,381. Callaway gained 2,234; Marshall 2,079, and Ballard 1,927. All of the Purchase counties are mainly agricultural and their showing as a whole is favorable.

There are various causes for the indifferent showing that is made by the State in the census. The one predominant agency that is reflected in the returns, however, is the long series of tobacco troubles with their consequent outbreaks of outlaws and incendiarism. Unquestionably this one cause has driven thousands of people from Kentucky, and this is evidenced so plainly by the census figures that no student of conditions in the State can be deceived therein. There are many factors militating against the progress of the State, such as our wretched tax system, our imperfect school system, our lack of improved roads. The decline in river business may account to some extent for the loss of population in river counties. The tobacco troubles have caused losses there. The advancing land values in the Bluegrass counties and elsewhere have a tendency to drive out poor men who are ambitious to own farms of their own, but who are unable to buy land at the $100 an acre upward. The feud wars have retarded the mountain counties and lack of railroad facilities has hindered development in various localities. The drift to the cities is noticeable and emigration has been large, while immigration has been small.

Whatever their sins of omission and commission, the mountains have had no tobacco troubles—and the mountain counties are setting the pace of progress for the rest of the State. Another ten years will see vast development in Eastern Kentucky. If the rest of the State expects to keep up with the procession it must get busy. There is a huge lesson in the census returns for the citizens of the Burley district and the Black Patch.

California State Fair

The DE LAVAL machines were exhibited in competition with the half a dozen other makes and, as usual, the DE LAVAL carried off the honors, being awarded the first premium.

Wherever they have been exhibited the DE LAVAL Cream Separators have invariably been awarded highest honors at every important exposition or actual-use contest.

The DE LAVAL skims closer, runs easier, lasts longer and is easier to keep clean than any other separator made.

JAMES P. McCREARY

The Best Man For The Democrats to Nominate for Governor.

One Whom the Office Seeks Because Of His Fitness In Every Way.

To the Democracy of the County and State:

There recently fell into my hands a circular, at the beginning of which is the following:

"Democrats must Reclaim Kentucky."

While it is pleasant and gratifying to read and know of the unity of the Democratic press of our State as to the redemption of the State, it seems to me a thoughtful reader that a more important matter still is the bringing about a more economical and just and satisfactory administration of the governmental affairs of our State. This can only be accomplished by a united effort upon the part of the Democratic voters of the State.

That there have been and are still existing factions and differences in the Democratic ranks, no one will deny. As to the results of former factions and differences which sent W. O. Ewing to the U. S. Senate and delivered the reins of State government to the present administration, it is not our pleasure nor desire to discuss.

The thought uppermost in the minds of the voter today should be to restore government of the Commonwealth to those God-given and eternal principles which controlled and ruled the government of this State for thirty years of uninterrupted peace and harmony. We believe this condition of affairs can only be brought about by nominating for the head of the ticket of the Democratic party, a clean, honest, conservative, competent gentleman; one who is in alliance with no faction whatever and one whom the office seeks because of his fitness in every way for the place. Such a one should be the Hon. James B. McCreary, tried, true and alive to all issues affecting the interests of the whole people.

Remember, fellow Democrats, in this age of intelligence and independent thought and action,
the party lash is of no avail,
and the Great Common People are going to be heard in behalf of that form of government whose principles are as enduring as truth itself, and at the same time make for the happiness, peace and prosperity of the whole people.

With all due respect for Messrs.
Johnson, Head, etc., we believe we should lay aside all selfish ambition for fame, office, gain, etc., and unite on one whom the office seeks and presents a phalanx against the people's foe, for him who carried the State in 1875 for the same office by 40,000 and who is a candidate for the same office in this particular crisis, is making a demand on him for his services.

Practical Democrat.

A BRILLIANT AFFAIR

Was The Reception Given Hon. A. B.
Rouse and Bride Tuesday Evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Rouse's reception, Tuesday evening from 7 to 10
p. m. in honor of their son, Congressman-elect A. B. Rouse and bride, was truly a brilliant affair. The spacious rooms were most charmingly decorated with palms, holly and carnations. Mr.
and Mrs. Dudley Rouse, with the guests of honor, received the many friends in the large parlor.
Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Walton, of Cincinnati, welcomed the guests in a most gracious manner. Presiding in the commodious dining room were Mrs. Thos. Fowler, Miss Bessie Hall, Nell Martin and Shirley Tolin, who served delicious refreshments, while Mrs. William Keyes, of Cincinnati, sister of the bride, presided at the punch table. The bridal presents, which consisted largely of elegant glass, handsome silverware and beautiful linen pieces, the collection being composed of almost innumerable gifts from Mr. and Mrs. Rouse will make their home in Burlington with his father and mother until his official duties require his presence at Washington.

The following from a distance were present: Mr. and Mrs. R.
P. Kelly, Westwood; Mr. and Mrs.
Wm. Wigel, Westwood; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Keyes, Cincinnati; Mr.
R. C. Kelly, Westwood; Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Walton, Cincinnati; Dr.
A. P. Walton, Walnut Hills; Hon.
and Mrs. W. H. Newell, Newport;
Hon. and Mrs. J. Lyman Bryan,
Newport; Senator L. W. Arnett,
Covington; Mr. and Mrs. J.
Julius Rouse, of Fayette county.

As a result of the meeting of Burlington tobacco growers held in Lexington, at the first of which the movement to form a permanent organization was adopted.
An address was issued to the growers of Burlington tobacco to hold mass meetings in their respective counties on December 31 and select delegates to attend a convention to be held in Lexington January 3d for the purpose of forming a permanent organization.

The Literary Society will meet with Mrs. W. L. Riddell, Friday evening of this week. All members are urged to be present, as it is the time for the regular election of officers.

At the Burlington icehouse last week was filled with an extra quantity of ice. The only thing as is now a very concern.

Tobacco Talk.

Don't Have to Raise It.

We don't have to raise tobacco.
Nothing would be better for our prosperity than for not a single tobacco seed to be sowed in 1911.
—Winchester News.

Brought a Good Price.

On Tuesday Mr. R. C. Clarkson sold a load of tobacco at the Planters Loose Leaf Warehouse in Springfield. The tobacco was extra good and sold for 15 cents per pound. Good tobacco is bringing a good price.—Lexington Falcon.

Only A Rumor Perhaps.

It is a current rumor that an order is on the way from a Mayfield firm for the purchase of $20,000 worth of tobacco and that buyers will ride to the barns in search of proper types of the rich brown weed.—Mayfield Mirror.

What We'd Like to See.

The prospective tobacco buyers are out in the country and are sizing up the crop with the intention of soon making an offer for the weed. We shall be glad to see the wagons come rolling in heavy loads and the farmer returning home with their pocket full of good hard cash.—Madisonville Hustler.

Hardly Ever Hear It Now.

You don't often, hardly ever;
in fact, never, hear the assertion that "the trust will never again offer low prices for tobacco." The strongest card of the anti-poolers failed to score.
The trust is going right along paying only just such prices as it barnes to pay very low prices, as Mt. Olivet Tribune-Democrat.

Forming Neighborhood Pools.

The tobacco situation in the Western district of Kentucky is in a peculiar condition, with 35 to 50 per cent. larger crop than last year, or about 75,000,000 pounds crop this year, against 57,000,000 last. In many sections the farmers have formed "neighborhood pools," each agreeing to hold his tobacco at a price agreed on by the pool.—Horse Cave Gazette.

Could Not Buy A Pound.

A prominent buyer recently made a trip through one of the best tobacco raising sections of Bath county, offering, it is said,
in some instances, the 8-cent bid it for good crops, but he could not buy a pound, the farmers all saying they would keep their crops and raise no tobacco next year, unless prices improved materially.—Paris News.

Was Blind, But Now They See.

It is sure bad news we have to give, but it is almost a certainty that the prices on tobacco are going lower than they are now. The best posted people predict that from 5 to 8 cents per pound will be the ruling prices soon. Those who refused to pool their crops can now see what their friend, the trust, is doing for them.—Carlisle Mercury.

Has A Gloomy Front.

The tobacco situation in this county presents a gloomy front to the growers, but this gloomy and hostile front is no more dark and foggy than the faces of the growers. A scout would probably better describe this appearance. It is worn by everybody, the pooler and the nonpooler alike. The pooler is so because he sees his 1909 tobacco being sold on the open market at prices little more than half of what he expected. The non-pooler and the independent is miffed because all his dreams on the 1910 have turned to nightmares.—

Skunk Skins Barred.

William Hughes, carrier on local route No. 1, was up against it a few days since, when a patron presented a skunk pelt which he desired to send by registered mail to St. Louis destined for a lady. The pelt was full grown and possessed an unusually strong fragrance, but the carrier informed its owner that he would deliver it at the Burlington postoffice, where its eligibility as mailable matter would be passed upon by the post master. When the pelt was delivered at the Burlington postoffice the chief was absent, and the deputy in charge, not knowing what to do with it, took it to an unoccupied room adjoining the office, turned an empty box over it, placed an empty barrel over the box, and thereon laid a heavy rock in order to keep safely both the pelt and the fragrance thereof until the return of her chief. No sooner had the postmaster returned than he was inquired as to the wherefore of the odor of the premises. The wherefore of the situation being explained, he decided instantly that the skunk pelt could not be registered and neither is it mailable matter, so on his first trip out thereafter, he returned to the postoffice with the pelt to its owner, with the information that Uncle Sam would not handle that class of merchandise.

Secretary of State Bruner has made an important ruling concerning the surplus of banks. He stated that in the future he would hold that each bank must put aside 10 per cent. of its net earnings annually until the surplus reached 20 per cent. of its capital stock. He also said that if the surplus becomes impaired by any reason that there could be no more dividends declared until the surplus required by law was created by the bank. Bruner is sustained in this ruling by attorney General Breathitt.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The Dismissing Of A Big Damage Suit Causes Great Surprise.

Considerable Business Disposed Of During The Short Session.

The December term of the Boone Circuit Court adjourned about 9 o'clock last Friday night, the session having lasted five days, during which time considerable business was disposed of.

The grand jury, which was in session four days, examined 20 witnesses and returned eight indictments, each of which was for a misdemeanor. It reported all the public buildings in good condition except the county infirmary, the roof of which leaks badly. The jury recommended that the roof be repaired.

The trial of the suit of Clint Riley, colored, against Alex. Finnell, colored, consumed over a day's time of the jury, and was the contest of the term. Riley sued Finnell for $850 for services rendered, and was given a majority verdict for $250.

In the suit of Isaac Flick vs. James Rogers the court adjudged Flick entitled to the unobstructed use of the passway in controversy, and made perpetual the injunction prohibiting the defendant interfering with the plaintiff or his agents in the use of said passway.

In the case of M. A. Cook vs. Ella Jenkins the defendant filed an amended answer that caused the plaintiff Cook to seek a continuance of the cause, which was granted and the trial was set for the third day of the next April term.

The big damage suit of Edith McAvoy against Wm. Dixon, and which was expected to prove the sensation of the term, was called for trial Friday about the middle of the afternoon. The plaintiffs witnesses were called and a Mr. Conner, of Kentucky, failed to answer. A subpoena had been issued for him but had not been returned. The plaintiffs attorney stated that he would go into trial without Mr. Conner, and proceeded to make the affidavit usual under such circumstances. The affidavit was filed and Conner could wear it claimed by the affidavit if he were present. The admission on the part of the defendant resulted in a collapse of the plaintiff's effort to get a continuance, and the work of securing a jury to try the case was begun, but no sooner than the jury had been called to the box, than the attorney for the plaintiff arose and had the suit dismissed, very much to the surprise of all.

greatly to the gratification of the defendant. Thus came to a sudden termination a suit that had been discussed the county over, and was classed as about the raciest piece of litigation ever brought in the Boone circuit court.

Rev. Allie Stith, pastor of Gunpowder Baptist church, served as a juror during the term. He was about the promptest and most attentive member of the jury. It has been a long time since a juror in Boone county, but why should they not serve as well as anyone else?

Judge Cammack came from Jackson, Breathitt county, where he had been holding a special term of the circuit court, for which there is a very large docket, the civil cases having been accumulating for several years because of so many criminal prosecutions. It is said that Judge is contemplating moving to Walton, it being much more accessible to the several county seats in his district than is his present home, Owenton.

The trustee's report showed the collection of $295 fines imposed by the court, most of the fines being paid by persons indicted and convicted of selling pooled tobacco.

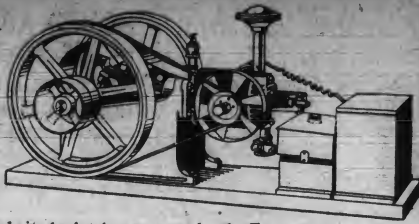

After a grind of five or six days the lawyers and officers of the court are about ready to take a rest.

BIG COCKING MAIN

At Constance Last Saturday Night Prevented By Sheriff Hume.

About 8 p. m. last Saturday, a hurry call for Sheriff B. B. Hume was sent in from Constance, his presence being desired to prevent a crowd of city sports from pulling off a cocking main they had booked for that night. The sheriff summoned Mont Slayback to accompany him, and they responded to the call and were soon on the scene. A considerable crowd of strangers was in evidence near a new building recently erected between town and the bridge spanning Dry Creek, which had been pointed out to the sheriff as the place where the main was to take place. Going to the building the officer demanded admittance which was refused. He told those who were interfering by locking the door, that by opening it he would prevent him from hammering it down. The door was finally opened and the officer entered the building, where he found a regulation cock pit, surrounded by curtains of seats for the comfort of spectators. He saw no birds, nor was there anything doing which authorized making an arrest, but the intentions of the crowd was so manifest that Sheriff Hume proceeded to lay the law down to the crowd, telling those present that cock fights would not be permitted in his bailiwick under any circumstances. Altho somewhat sullen the crowd finally dispersed, but the officer lingered near for several hours, thinking the sports might return to make another trial at pulling off the main. The building in which the fight was to take place had been completed but a few days, and was to have been dedicated last Saturday night. The citizens of Constance are considerably worked up over the affair and will not permit the building used for the purpose for which it was constructed, and it might as well be abandoned.

MEDICOS ENTERTAINED

By The Boone Library Association With An Elaborate Menu.

The Boone Library Association distinguished itself, last Friday night, as a most delightful entertainer by the banquet tendered the Boone County Medical Society. The good cooks excelled themselves in the preparation and arrangement of the elaborate menu, the table being a thing of beauty and a joy for a considerable time. The hall had been tastefully decorated for the occasion, and everything was in perfect harmony with the sparkling wit with which the responses to the numerous toasts abounded. Everyone present entered heartily and soul into the pleasures of the evening, not a single occurrence was there to detract from the pleasure of any person. In fact everyone present was bent on contributing to the pleasure of the occasion and there was not a dull moment passed. Rev. "JUST FOR FUN"

A Comedy Presented By The Yanise Dramatic Club of Erlanger Was Well Received.

The Yanise Dramatic Club, composed of Erlanger young people, appeared at Liberty Hall, last Saturday night, in "Just For Fun," a comedy in which some very clever acting is done, each of the young ladies and gentlemen having a clear conception of the character they portray. Caste of characters: Cathryn Scott—Mrs. Fitzgerald Maudeville Day Smythe, a would be society leader; Ella Tallafiero—Miss Edith Morton, Mrs. DeSmythe's niece, a western heiress; Sadie Lee Fogg—a friend of Miss Morton's; Loretta Ransom—Jane McCarthy, a maid-servant; Morris Thomas—Lord Chelsea, an English Lord; Floyd Ryle—a friend of Lord Chelsea. The very easy manner of the young ladies and gentlemen on the stage was the result of careful drilling, presumably by Miss Ella Tallafiero, an accomplished elocutionist. The club swinging and singing by little Miss Armadale Terrill, and the singing of German songs by little Miss Russell Ransom captivated the audience and was most heartily applauded. The performance deserved a much better patronage than it received.

Mrs. James B. Finnell Dead.

Mrs. Fannie Finnell, wife of Judge James B. Finnell, died at her home on Jackson street Monday night at 8:30 o'clock. She had been in poor health for some time past and her death was not a surprise to those who knew her precarious condition.

Mrs. Finnell was a member of the Baptist church of this city, and was a most estimable, christian woman.

She leaves besides her husband, three children: Messrs. Robert and James B. Jr., and Mrs. Eva Fisher. The sympathies of the entire community is extended to the bereaved family.

The funeral services will take place to-morrow, Wednesday, morning at 10:30 at the Methodist church, conducted by Rev. B. A. Dawes. The burial will take place in the Georgetown cemetery. The pall bearers will be R. B. Thomas, John A. Bell, G. H. Nunnelle, Eugene Rucker, Hugh Anderson, W. A. Gaines, Harry Craig—Georgetown News, Dec 13th.

of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be spared in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent. interest on what remains a year, or three per cent for what remains six months. SYNOPSIS.

Capt. Nathaniel Plum of the sloopy Ty-Schoon, lands second in Boone and third in the strength of the Mormon. Chadlied Price, Mormon counselor, convinces him, leaving him to be expected and targets for the ammunition aboard the sloop. He binds Nat by a solemn oath to deliver a package to Franklin Pierce, president of the United States. Near Price's cabin Nat sees the frightened face of a young woman who disappears in the darkness, leaving an odor of lilacs. It develops that Nat's visit to the island is to demand repentance of the king. Strang, for the looking of his sloop by Mormon. Price shows Nat the king's palace, through a window he sees the king's wife, who Price says is the king's seventh wife. Calling at the king's office Nat is warned by a young woman that his life is in danger. Strang professes indignation when he hears Nat's grievance and promises to punish the guilty. Nat rescues Nell, who is being publicly whipped, and the king orders the sheriff, Arthur Crooke, to pursue and kill the two men. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Nell's sister. The two men plan to escape on Nat's sloop, and take a plan to Winnome, daughter of Arthur Crooke, and sweetheart of Nat. Nat discovers that the sloop is gone. Marion tells him that his ship had been seized by the Mormons. She begs him to leave the island, telling him that nothing can save her from Strang, whom she is doomed to marry. Plum finds Price ravine mad. Recovering, he tells Nat that Strang is doomed, that armed men are descending on the island. Nat learns that Strang has been summoned to the castle by Strang. Nat kills Arthur Crooke, and after a desperate fight with the king, he escapes. He finds the avenging boat from the mainland, descends on St. James, and Nat is a part in the battle and the latter is wounded.

He felt the dash of the water in his face and it put new life into him. Somebody had raised him to a sitting posture and was supporting him there while a second person bound a cloth about his head. He opened his eyes and the light of day shot into them like a stinging, burning charge of needle-points, and he closed them with a shudder. The support he felt was a woman who was blinding his head. He had not seen her face. Beyond her he had caught a half-formed vision of many people and the glimmering edge of the sea, and as he lay with closed eyes the murmur of voices came to him. The support he felt was taken away, slowly, as if the person who held him feared that he would fall. Nathaniel stiffened himself to show his returning strength and opened his eyes again. This time the pain was not so great. A few years ago, in a grove, he had seen her and among them were women; still farther away, so far that his brain grew dizzy as he looked, there was a black moving crowd. He was among the wounded. The Mormon women were here. Down there along the shore—among the dead—had assembled the population of St. James.

A strange sickness overpowered him and he sank back against his supporter. A cool hand passed over his face. It was a soothing, gentle touch—the hand of the woman. He felt the sweep of soft hair against his cheek—a breath whispering in his ear.

"You will be better soon." His heart stood still.

"You will be better—"

Against his rough cheek there fell the soft pressure of a woman's lips.

Nathaniel pulled himself erect, every drop of blood in him striving for the mastery of his body, his strength. He tried to turn, but strong arms raised him from behind. A man's voice spoke to him, a man's strength held him. In an agony of appeal Marion's name burst from his lips.

"Shh!" warned the voice behind him. "Are you crazy?"

The arms relaxed their hold and Nathaniel dragged himself to his knees. The woman was gone. As far as he could see there were people—scores of them, hundreds of them—multiplied into thousands and millions as he looked, until there was only a black cloud about him. He staggered to his feet and a strong hand kept him from falling while his brain slowly cleared. The millions and thousands and hundreds of people dissolved themselves into the day until only a single figure stood where he had seen multitudes. He turned a face weakly to the man beside him.

"Where did she go?" he asked.

"It was a boyish face into which his pleading eyes gazed, a face white with the strain of battle, reddened a little on the cheek with a smudge of blood, and there was a startled, frightened look in it that did not come of the strife that had passed.

"Who? What are you talking about?"

"The woman," whispered Nathaniel. "The woman—Marion—who kissed—"

The young fellow's hand gripped his arm in a sudden fierce clutch.

"You've been dreaming!" he exclaimed in a threatening voice. "Shut up!" He spoke the words loudly. Then quickly dropping his voice to a whisper he added: "For God's sake don't betray her! They saw her with us—everybody knows that it was the king's wife with you!"

The king's wife! Nathaniel was too weak to analyze the words beyond the fact that they carried the dread truth of his fears deep into his soul. Who would have come to him but Marion? Who else would have kissed him? It was her voice that had whispered in his ear—the thrill of her hand that had passed over his face. And this man had said that she was the wife of the king! He heard the words of the king, Strang, for the looking of his sloop by Mormon. Price shows Nat the king's palace, through a window he sees the king's wife, who Price says is the king's seventh wife. Calling at the king's office Nat is warned by a young woman that his life is in danger. Strang professes indignation when he hears Nat's grievance and promises to punish the guilty. Nat rescues Nell, who is being publicly whipped, and the king orders the sheriff, Arthur Crooke, to pursue and kill the two men. Plum learns that Marion, the girl of the lilacs, is Nell's sister. The two men plan to escape on Nat's sloop, and take a plan to Winnome, daughter of Arthur Crooke, and sweetheart of Nat. Nat discovers that the sloop is gone. Marion tells him that his ship had been seized by the Mormons. She begs him to leave the island, telling him that nothing can save her from Strang, whom she is doomed to marry. Plum finds Price ravine mad. Recovering, he tells Nat that Strang is doomed, that armed men are descending on the island. Nat learns that Strang has been summoned to the castle by Strang. Nat kills Arthur Crooke, and after a desperate fight with the king, he escapes. He finds the avenging boat from the mainland, descends on St. James, and Nat is a part in the battle and the latter is wounded.

After a time—it seemed a day of terrible work and pain to him—he came to the streets of the town, and in a half-conscious sort of way he cursed at the rabble trailing at their heels. They passed close to the temple, dirt and blood and a burning torment shutting the vision of it from his eyes, and beyond this there was another crowd. An aisle opened for them, as it had opened for others ahead of them. In front of the jail they stopped. Nathaniel's head hung heavily upon his breast and he made no effort to raise it. All ambition and desire had left him, all desire but one, and that was to drop upon the ground and lie there for endless, restful years. What consciousness was left in him was ebbing swiftly; he saw black,athomless night about him and the earth seemed slipping from under his feet.

A voice dragged him back into life—a voice that boomed in his ears like rolling thunder and set every fiber in him quivering with emotion. He drew himself erect with the involuntary strength of one mastering the last spasm of death and as they dragged him through the door he saw there within—on—his reach of him the great, living face of Strang, glowing at him as if from out of a mist—red-eyed, white fanged, filled with the vengeance of a beast.

The great voice rumbled in his ears again.

"Take that man to the dungeon!"

CHAPTER X.

Winnome's Verdict of Death.

The voice—the condemning words—followed Nathaniel as he staggered on between his two guards; it haunted him still as the cold chill of the rotting dungeon walls struck in his face; it remained with him as he stood swaying in the thick gloom—the voice rumbling in his ears, the words beating against his head, the shudder of them sickened him, until he stretched out his arms and there fell from him such a cry as had never tortured his lips before.

Strang was alive! He had left the spark of life in him, and the woman who loved him had fanned it back into full flame.

Strang was alive! And Marion—Marion was his wife!

The voice of the king taunted him from the black chaos that hid the dungeon walls. The words struck at him, filling his head with shooting pain, and he turned back and sank to the ground to get away from them. They followed, and that vengeful leer of the king was behind them, urging them on, until they beat his face into the sticky earth, and smothered him into what he thought was death.

There came rest after that, a long silent rest. Winnome's Verdict of Death.

He came rest after that, a long silent rest. Winnome's Verdict of Death.

Nathaniel sat up. Nell's strong arm at his back. There was a light in the room now and he could see his companion's face, smiling at him encouragingly. The sight of it was like an elixir to him. He drank again and new life coursed through him.

"Yes! All of a piece!" he repeated drowsily. "Sorry for you—Nell!" and he seemed to sleep again.

Nell laughed as he wiped his companion's face with a wet cloth.

"I'm used to it, Nat. Been here before," he said. "Can you get up? There's a bunch over here—not long enough to stretch you out on or I would have made you a bed of it, but it's better than this mud to sit on."

He put his arms about Nathaniel and helped him to his feet. For a few moments the wounded man stood with voice of other men near him but did not understand what they were saying. He knew that after a moment there was a man on each side of him holding him by the arms, and mechanically he moved his legs, knowing that they wanted him to walk. They did not guess how weak he was—how he struggled to keep from becoming too great a weight on their hands. Once or twice they stopped in their agonizing climb up the hill. On its top the cool sea air swept into Nathaniel's face and it was like water to a parched throat.

The Bible in Modern Education

F THE Bible springs from the deep wells of human experience, it is but inevitable that it will again touch the springs of life and produce experience.

The great problems of human life are perennial. The forces in which they appear may differ from age to age; but no matter how much the expressions may change they point to a fundamental deep-seated need that in some way must be met. Whether we go to agriculture, commerce, science or art we find the same problems, the same elements to the solution of the ever recurring problems. And these who do, put the large majority of humanity under obligations to them. Phenomena has a genius for commerce that it revealed to the world the principles that govern the life of the nation into the dark chambers of superstition and drew out the key to modern science. Rome ascended the mountain and was rewarded with a vision of a world empire and the laws to govern it. The Germanic people were aroused from their barbaric slumbers, and a world of human progress, rising locomotives, flashing wires, a world bound together by arteries of steel and nerves of iron sprang into existence. But it was the Hebrew people who solved the great problems of human life. To the great question, "Where did the universe come from?" they found an answer that rushes down the ages carrying with it a lasting satisfaction to the intellectual needs of humanity; it is the acme of all philosophical discovery to know that "in the beginning" a personal "God created heaven and earth."

But there is another question equally deep with a sweeping significance which comes to us in this form, "What is this whole system for?" Where in the play and interplay of forces, in the everlasting whirl of atomic combinations and disolutions, where in the counter process of growth balanced by the counter process of decay, do we find the one thing in which any particular purpose is discerned? Who will find our answer to this perplexing question? What is the promontory whose summit shows a world working out a purpose worthy of infinite wisdom and infinite power? The Hebrews found the answer, and Christ formulated it when he announced and urged to a pursuit of the world goal. "Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." With increasingly clarified vision humanity is beginning to see that the purpose of creation is not to balance world systems or to draft and build up institutions. All these, as the Master teacher said, are for man. The great goal of divine activity through the boundless ages is the development of persons capable of seeing God's great end, efficient in working them out, and worthy of the enjoyment of his blessedness and glory.

The goal of creation is the perfection of personality, the perfection of personality in its three-fold aspect of intellect, feeling and will. Sight of a great goal, ability to realize the goal with the realization of this goal. We come now to the question directly involved, "Does the Bible contribute to the fulfillment of this end?" There can be no aspiration without the vision of an end. A goal for personal aspiration must appeal not to the one part only, but to the whole person. Here other systems of religion prove themselves incompetent. They often appeal to the one element in the personal life to the neglect of others. They may develop the intellect but destroy the will and the affections as in the case of Grecian and Roman stoicism; or they may aim at feelings only, with no object to direct as in the case of Grecian mysticism and the superstitious practices of the pagan world, or they may urge a sort of brute determination without a purpose suggested by reason or dictated by the feelings. The Bible, on the contrary, is full of spiritual life, or every element of the personal life.

Christianity and Science.

The Christian Scientist looks through his telescope with bowed head in reverential mood because he is thinking of God's thoughts after him. He enters the laboratory with the hush of the eternities upon him, for he is conscious that he treads on holy ground, for an affectionate Father speaks to him from the chemical retort, the boiling balance and the throbbing cells. In view of this fact it is not surprising that the Christian religion has been the most heroic propaganda of the scientific spirit. Nor is it a cause for wonderment, that and legs and arms are beginning to throw off the fetters of their adulation and are welcoming back that system of truth that furnishes the foundation stones for their existence.

Stepmother of Miss Julia. Romance and poetry have delighted to weave garlands with which to celebrate and perpetuate the glory of the blue grass in old Kentucky, famed for its fine horses, beautiful women and minstrels.

Kentucky has been designated as the home of the mint julep, and its colonials have become famous all over the world for the easy and graceful way in which they drink whiskey with a little dash of sugar and a sprig or two of mint in their drink, to overcome the necessity for a large amount of water in the beverage. The true Kentuckian doesn't want his whiskey drowned.

It transpires, however, that the real home of the mint and the mint julep is right here in Missouri, whose crop of mint last year amounted to 7,653 pounds, or enough to make 1,224,320 juleps. This amount includes the marketed product only, no account having been taken of the countless thousands of juleps which were compounded during the year with a dash of the undiluted moonshine whiskey that never paid a cent of tax.—St. Louis Star.

When it was Roughter. Paul Withington, the Harvard coach, was praising the milder football of 1910.

"Football in the '90s was a terrible game," said Mr. Withington. "Rough, get you know, devoted a whole chapter of 'Outre Mer' to its horrors. Some of the stories of the football of '90 or '91 are, in fact, almost incredible."

"A Philadelphia sporting editor returned one November Saturday from West Philadelphia with a pale, frightened face."

"Many accidents at the game?" a police reporter asked him.

"One frightful accident," replied the sporting editor. "A powerful mule from a neighboring colt dealer's entered the field, lumbered into one of the hottest scrimmages and got killed."

MONOCLE

Cholly Glim—Beg pardon, my good man, but how can I find the customs office?

Jack Tar—I'll tell ye, mate; shilt yer lantern from starboard to port and foller the twist in yer face.

Without Malice.

"What have you done?" exclaimed Mrs. Cumrox, as she flourished a letter at him.

"Has that anything to do with the correspondence I tried to help you with?"

"It has. It's an indignant protest. I told you to address that distinguished pianist as 'Herr Professor.'"

"And I did so."

"Yes. But you wrote it 'Hair Professor!'"

Cured.

"Your son used to be so round-shouldered. How did you get him cured of it? He seems to be so straight now."

"He has become an aviation enthusiast, and spends most of his time watching the bird-men."

WONDERED WHY.

Found the Answer Was "Coffee."

Many pale, sickly persons wonder for years why they have to suffer so, and eventually discover that the drug—caffeine—in coffee is the main cause of the trouble.

"I was always very fond of coffee and drank it every day. I never had much flesh and often wondered why I was always so pale, thin and weak."

"About five years ago my health completely broke down and I was confined to my bed. My stomach was in such condition that I could hardly take sufficient nourishment to sustain life."

"During this time I was drinking coffee, didn't think I could do without it."

"After awhile I came to the conclusion that coffee was hurting me, and decided to give it up and try Tea."

"I didn't like the taste of it at first, but when it was made up—bottled until dark and rich—I soon became fond of it."

"In one week I began to feel better. I could eat more and sleep better. My sick headache was less frequent and within five months I looked and felt like a new being, headache spells entirely gone."

"My health continued to improve and today I am well and strong, weigh 148 pounds. I attribute my present health to the life-giving qualities of Postum."

"Read 'There's a Reason,' in Pkgs."

"Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest."

The low prices at which tobacco is selling is causing a bustle among an element of growers who brought about the failure of a 1930 pool. They have cut their eyes teeth and got their eyes opened at last.

Kentucky has 8,000 fewer acres sown in winter wheat this fall than in the fall of 1929. Figures announced to-day by the Department of Agriculture show 792,000 acres in Kentucky as against 800,000 acres in 1929. The indicated total winter wheat area of the United States is 34,685,000 acres, or 82,500 acres more than 1929.

The State Democratic Committee which called for a primary election to nominate a candidate for Governor and other State offices, fell down badly when it refused to provide for the nomination of a candidate for United States Senator at the same time and in the same manner. As consistency is a jewel it has no place in politics.

Before the adjournment of the Adams county, Ohio, grand jury which is probing election corruption in that county, it is expected that at least 1,500 and maybe 2,000 Adams county voters will be indicted for buying or selling votes. The traffic in votes had become so notorious and open that the local authorities were compelled to take action, and they appear to be doing a good job, although long delayed.

The new Democratic members of the next House of Representatives in Congress will be in caucus in Washington, D. C., on the 19th of January 1931, at which time they will nominate Champ Clark of Missouri, for Speaker. Clark, the Speaker of the House, so changed as to have a committee on committees, which will relieve the Speaker of a great deal of the power over legislation which has been wielded so long by that officer, and against which a rebellion came and resulted in the Democratic control of the incoming House.

Mrs. Alonzo Plunkett, who has been very ill for over a year, died at her home at Walton, Monday afternoon. Mrs. Plunkett was operated on about two years ago for a cancer on the breast, and while she rallied out of the affliction to a certain degree, yet her constitution was so broken down by the ravages of the disease that consumption followed and death was a relief to her suffering. Mrs. Plunkett was Miss Lou Fling, before marriage, and was born and reared in this section. She was a loving wife, a devoted mother and a good neighbor. Her husband and three children survive her, the children being Mrs. Mary Holloway of Pleasanton, Va., Harry Plunkett of Georgetown, and Kirtley of Walton. The funeral took place at the Bethel Baptist church, Verona, Wednesday afternoon. Rev. H. C. Wayman conducting the services.

The State Democratic Committee met in Louisville and by a vote of eight to four called for a primary to nominate Democratic candidates for State offices for the election in November, 1931. At the same time the committee, by a vote of six to five, with one of the members refusing to vote, ruled that the endorsement of a candidate for United States Senator should not be considered by the voters of the State in the primary. The date of the primary, as fixed in resolution adopted by the committee, is Saturday, May 27th. A subcommittee was named to look after all the details of the primary and to collect funds from the Democrats of the State to assist in defraying the expense of it. This body is entrusted with the duty of getting the call for the primary in legal form and attending to other matters, and will report back to the committee as a whole on Wednesday, January 25th.

A married lady from Florida who is on a visit to relatives near town came into the office Monday and said she wanted to pay a little debt of a few dollars which she had contracted in 1884, when she was a little girl. She said the bill for the amount had been sent to her father during his life, but that he said that he had never ordered the work done, but, while she was then but a little girl in short dresses, she remembered that she had ordered it. Our books of twenty-six years ago had been put away and we told her that we had no recollection of the account, but if she insisted on paying it, we would take the amount of $3.50. She insisted and paid us cash. How she ever remembered it twenty-six years is remarkable but her integrity is even more remarkable than her memory. In all of our experience in business we never have seen a case as this. It shows that there is such a thing as old-fashioned honesty.—Elizabethtown News

D. H. Morgerson, of Lower Four Mile, sold a portion of his tobacco crop at Lexington this week at prices ranging from 7 1/2 to 18 3/4 cents, or an average of $15.32. This was the record average for the season.—Winchester Democrat.

After a lapse of two years and five months from the time the local option election was held in Georgetown the doors of the saloons are finally closed. What shall be the result? The citizens of this city and county will be held responsible for the answer.—Georgetown News

On request of M. C. Rinking, Commissioner of Agriculture, the Attorney General has given an opinion regarding the power of the County Livestock Inspector. The question was whether the Inspector had to wait for notice from the owner of stock before making examination where it was suspected that there existed a communicable or contagious disease. The opinion holds the Inspector may enter and inspect stock if he has information that there is disease there.

Statistics show that Kentucky leads all other states in the matter of blindness, there being more blind people according to population than in any other state in the union. Kentucky even has "blind tigers," and once in awhile you see a Kentuckian "blind drunk," but a Kentuckian who has the farmers laid down on the pooling proposition and held their hands up to the trust to be the you would infer that the tobacco growers are all blind.—Dover News.

A firm from Pittsburg is boring for oil on the land of Mrs. Whipple, near Worthville. It seems that in the early sixties while boring for water on this farm oil was found at the depth of about 180 feet. But the war coming on no further steps were taken, and in fact the matter was forgotten by all but Mrs. Whipple, who succeeded in getting a Pittsburg company interested. If oil is struck in paying quantities, the already prosperous city of Worthville will grow like magic, and in less than six months will be a city of three or four thousand inhabitants, while the whole country will to a certain extent be the beneficiary of finding oil.—Carrollton Democrat

Shortly after the war the Kentucky Legislature allowed all slaves who had married in bondage to go before the County Clerk and make a declaration thereby legitimizing their marriage and issue. Owing to ignorance this was done in but a few instances, the consequences being that the pension bureau turned down all widows and orphan's pension claims. At the last session of Kentucky Legislature Senator Braden introduced a bill which was put thru both houses by State Senator Cureton, of Louisville, making the customary law of marriage legitimate. They were usually performed with out license. The pension bureau has ruled that it can now consider any claims which may be filed since the act of the Legislature went into effect last July. All claims which were filed before that date must be refilled. There are seventy hundred cases in the State of negro soldiers whose descendants will become pensionable under the ruling of the pension bureau.

Following is the dog law in this State, a strict enforcement of which would just about cause civil war.

"Any owner or harbinger of a dog, subject to be taxed, who shall fail or refuse to list the dog with the sheriff, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $10 for each dog he so fails or refuses to list; for taxation; and any person who shall keep or harbor a dog upon his premises or elsewhere, and who fails or refuses to pay the tax thereon when due, shall be fined $25 for each offense; and, upon conviction, the judgment may include an order requiring such dog to be killed by the sheriff, or be executed by any peace officer, who shall be allowed $1 therefor, to be taxed as cost. It shall be the duty of the sheriff and his deputies, and each constable in his district, to kill or cause to be killed any dog the owner of which has failed to pay the tax, and for each dog so killed, without the order of a court such officer shall be allowed by the fiscal court fifty cents, to be paid out of the dog tax fund. For the purpose of this act, the tax on dogs shall be considered the first day of March of each year. Provided, however, the sheriff may collect such tax at any time and in such manner as taxes are now collectible by law."

A watermelon at this time of the year is something out of the ordinary. Mr. W. W. Howlett, who lives near Popular Ridge church, left one at C. A. Bell & Co's. store Monday. The melon is in a good state of ripeness and will make mighty good eating at Christmas.—Trimble County Democrat

Judge Hobson, of the Court of Appeals, must pass upon the validity of the 1929 pooling contract of the Burley Tobacco Society. The case before him is that of J. T. Steen and J. M. Forrest, of Barren County, tobacco growers, against the Barren County Board of Control of the Burley Tobacco Society. The board sued for a mandatory order of the Barren Circuit Court directing Steen and Forrest, poolers of their 1929 crop of tobacco to deliver their tobacco to the society's warehouse at Glasgow. The lower court granted that order and the growers appeal, asking that the mandatory order be dissolved. The poolers contend that the society violated the pooling contract by selling some of the 1929 pooled tobacco on the market and that they should be permitted to dispose of their crops. The society claims that there are thousands of pounds of pooled tobacco not delivered into its custody and that to permit the poolers to throw the undelivered pooled tobacco on the market would greatly depreciate the price of the crop in the 1929 pool. Judge Hobson called in Judge Settle to hear the case.

Local Happenings.

It was a beautifully white Christmas.

The snow was fine for the winter show.

Each of the local merchants reports a big holiday trade.

Everybody appeared to be ready to celebrate Christmas.

According to the last census Rising-Sun has a population of 1,513.

The slaughter of rabbits this season has not been so immense as usual.

Everything is reported to be very quiet about the Constance cock pit.

C. M. Baldon had his store room nicely decorated with evergreen for the holidays.

Cincinnati is not the largest city in the United States, but when it comes to big fires she is a topnotcher.

Santa Claus never had a more favorable night upon which to make his annual round with sleigh and reindeer.

The local colored school had a very nice Christmas tree last Friday night. It bore a very large crop of presents.

Sleighbearing began to be possible about noon last Saturday, very much to the delight of the owners of cutters, &c.

Heavy roads the latter part of last week delayed both the arrival and the departure of the mails on several days.

Have you not noticed that when you lived through the new year?

The local dealer in furs has a representative in Florida, from whom he expects to receive several assignments of goods during the season.

The young who owns a good horse and a nice sleigh has been very strictly in it the past week, and the music of sleigh bells has filled the ozone.

There was considerable coming and going the latter part of last week. The approach of the holidays generally gets a move on most of the people.

Elbert Roberts has been doing some sensational rolling at the box-ball alley, but he has not been able to break the Slayback-Tanner tie of 208.

Only a few days more in which you can shoot quail. According to reports there will be plenty left from which a large crop will be produced next year.

The rural mail carriers from all over the county report very heavy deliveries and large collection nearly every day last week, especially during the latter part.

F. J. Waldo, editor of the Rising Sun Recorder, and his good wife celebrated the 58th anniversary of their wedding a few days since.

Mr. Waldo declared this to be no failure of marriage.

James Slayback gave a Christmas performance with his grand piano at E. E. Kelly's store, last Saturday night. He has a good machine and a fine collection of records.

Johnnie Scotchorn and his cousin, Miss Adelia Scotchorn, were married at the residence of Rev. Edgar C. Riley, last Thursday afternoon. Here is wishing them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

All the readers of the Recorder, so far as have been heard from, had a merry Christmas, and they are now wished a happy new year that will be brought with prosperity throughout the entire twelve months.

Snow commenced falling about 3 a. m. last Friday, continuing all day, at times the flakes being very large and falling down at a rapid rate. By night the beautiful had reached a depth of several inches and was wet and heavy.

Mr. and Mrs. James Kelly's hospitable home two miles west of Burlington, was the scene of a large collection of gay young people last Saturday night, the occasion being a big surprise party given in their son, Wilber. All had a most delightful time.

During the past season James DeHart raised 8,400 pounds of fine brown corn on six acres of ground below town. He had it threshed last week and stored in the Caning Factory. Early in the new year Mr. DeHart will begin the manufacture of brooms.—Rising Sun Local.

Knockers' Club Meet.

Burlington Knockers' Club No. 1 held its bi-monthly meeting one afternoon last week, the president in the chair and the other officers all present as were a quorum of the members.

After considerable routine business was transacted the following preamble and resolutions were introduced and unanimously adopted upon motion of Knock, seconded by Ham:

Whereas, it has come to the knowledge of this club that when the public school in Burlington district closed several days since that it closed indefinitely on account of insufficient room to accommodate the large number of pupils. Therefore be it resolved:

1st. That this club most heartily endorses the action of the teacher in closing the school indefinitely for the reason above set out.

2d. That the teacher ought not to have accepted the quarters for the school which were assigned at the beginning of the term.

3d. That these resolutions be published in the Boone County Recorder, and that the publisher be paid $1.00 for publishing them out of any money in the hands of the publisher not otherwise appropriated.

The meeting adjourned.

A Great Inconvenience.

The Recorder's subscribers at Walton and other offices the papers for which was through the Walton office have been annoyed for several weeks because of irregular and delayed delivery.

It is the fault of the Walton office but lies wholly with service on the railroad. The matter was taken up with the Superintendent of mails at Cincinnati several days ago, hoping to hasten the delivery at the offices where subscribers have been annoyed by the delay in the delivery of their papers for several weeks. Previous to the time the delay complained of first began the postmistress at Burlington made up the papers in which she put the Walton, Verona, Hume, Berkshire, Beaver Lick, Big Bone, Landing, Hamilton, and several other offices, which she labeled "Walton Distribution." Under this handling of the papers they never failed to reach their destination on time, but five or six weeks ago the postmistress was directed from headquarters to make up the mail as now sent out from Burlington and trouble began.

It is hoped that by the explanation made to the superintendent of mails at Cincinnati to have the old order restored to the present trouble will cease.

We Are Compelled to Do It.

Not the Recorder's will but that of the Government be done! The Postoffice Department at Washington has ruled that subscription to papers must be paid either in advance or by a specified time before they are mailed. The Recorder has a large number of subscribers whose arrears is now beyond the limit prescribed, and to comply with the law their names will have to be dropped from its list. It is by no means its desire to do this, but the law must be obeyed or its publisher is liable to be called to the attention of the Postoffice Department. The Recorder would be willing to pay any of the subscribers longer were it not that Uncle Sam said some time since it must not be done. It is possible pay up at once that your name may continue on the list after the first of 1911.

Robert N. Utz Dead.

After a lingering illness Robert N. Utz died at his home three miles west of Valley Falls, Kansas, on Tuesday, November 29th in his 30th year. He was a native of this county, was a son of late Jonathan Utz, and was born October 19th, 1881. He is survived by his widow, seven children and fourteen grandchildren. He settled in Kansas in 1898, and in 1900 he moved to Kansas, where he resided until his death. Mr. Utz leaves quite a number of relatives in this county, among them being Mrs. Mary Kendall, of Walton, who was his sister. Most all the Boone county people with whom Mr. Utz was acquainted before he left this, his native county, have gone to their reward.

Saved From Awful Death.

How an appalling calamity in his family was prevented is told by A. D. McDonald, of Fayetteville, N. E. R. D. No. 1. "My sister had consumption," he writes, "she was very thin and pale, had no appetite and seemed to grow weaker every day as all remedies failed, till Dr. King's New Discovery was tried, and so completely cured her, that she has not been troubled with a cough since. It is the best medicine I ever saw or heard of." For coughs, colds, la grippe, asthma, croup, hemorrhage, all bronchitis, croup, it has no equal. 50c. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by Bentler's drug store Erlanger.

The dam at Fernbank is finished, according to an announcement from the headquarters of the United States engineering corps in Cincinnati. The structure is known to government engineers as dam No. 37, and is one of the series of 57 designed to give a minimum stage of nine feet in water in the channel of the Ohio river from Pittsburgh to Cairo. The maximum depth will be about eighteen feet. The first test of the new dam will not be made until navigation conditions call for its use. The engineering corps figures that when in use the Fernbank dam will back up the water as far as California. Only eighteen miles above Cincinnati.

The steamboat people took the holiday vacation because of the ice causing a suspension of navigation.

(By C. C. Sleet, of Beaver.)

We tried in our last, as best we could, to get you to fully realize your need of an organization. We must fully realize there is no help on the out side. When we would plead with the dummer with tears in our eyes not to sell his tobacco on the outside of the pool, that he would break down the pool and bring a great calamity upon the farmers, he would reply "Let the ole pool go, the Trust will not let the price of tobacco go down for several years, then we can organize another pool. I don't like the way this pool is run anyway." Just an excuse to try to cover the blackness of his heart, but a covering of this kind doesn't cover. If the bad boy spoken of in our last was never made to see his sin in causing the innocent creatures to suffer, his heart becomes harder and harder until his greatest pleasure was found in the torture and suffering of both man and beast, and the greater the torture and suffering the greater his enjoyment. So we can never expect the heart of Mr. Duke to be so soft and sympathetic and give you a good price for your tobacco through sympathy, from the very fact of the means he had to employ in compelling those manufacturing plants that stood out against him to submit to his authority. With each conquest he has become harder and harder in heart and more determined to punish. Where are the men who prophesied he wouldn't let the price of tobacco go down for two or three years? They have proven poor prophets. They have been like the blind leading the blind. They have fallen into the ditch, and if they do not repent of their sins it would be better if they were covered up in the ditch. We have jails and workhouses for bad boys because they are a menace to good society. We do not want our good boys to come under their influence, so we put them in a flock to themselves in workhouses and in houses of refuge, and do what we can for them to make them better. Some of them repent and go out into good homes and make good citizens. Now is there a man hard enough in heart or so loyal to principle as to always be referring to the boys past life, when he is trying so hard to live right? No. We try to encourage him and help him forget the past and inspire in him a greater hope for the future. So to those who have stayed out of the pool for any cause whatever, if they are only made to see their mistake and enter into the contest to help free the farmer from the slavery of the trust, that is a little soul indeed that would taunt him and say you once were a bad boy, but, if you were a true man, you would help him forget the past and encourage him and put confidence in him and he would be as grateful to you as the Psalmist of Israel was to the king when he said, "The Lord took me out of a horrible pit, established my goings up, put a new song in my mouth even unto God." So when the dummer, the criticizer and the fault finder finds they are in a horrible pit, dug by the trust, that they in their blindness have fallen into it and are now crying for some way of escape, for some hand to liberate them, are we going to refuse them? Are we going to refuse the hand? Come to the mouth of the pit and say it is good enough for you—you ought not to have fallen in. We, the spirit of true manhood will reach down, take hold of them and lift them out, and by so doing the arm that is extended in strength and in the helping and encouraging of others our faith is made stronger. We do not have to give an account to the great day of judgment for others—only for self, for our own acts and not for another. Do we, as the people of these United States of America, fail to stand for our name and the honor of our country because we happen not to like or be in sympathy with our President? Many of us would like Mr. Taft well enough to vote for him for president, and the more we know of him the less we like him; but would that keep us from defending the good name of our country and if some foreign nation should insult our President? He is now our President. While he was not our choice he was the choice of the majority and for that reason as good citizens we would defend him with our hearts blood, because we love our country above the man. I would not vote for one of my brothers, as much as I love them, for an office in the Burley pool if he was not a tobacco raiser and in full sympathy with the movement, and thought him to be the right man in the right place, but should the majority choose him then I would defend him until the next election, when I would use my utmost to defeat him. No organization will stand if we place men above the organization. The best of men are human and will make mistakes. It might be possible to get a perfect organization by taking the best from the many, but we never expect to see a perfect man in point of wisdom. There is always something to be learned and we believe the men at the head of our organization are men with good common sense and of fair judgment, and they were elected by the people and have been faithful to us in victory and in defeat. They never faltered until they were deserted by their friends and overpowered by the enemy.

What we are going to tell you now rightly belonged under the head, "The Cause of the failure of the 1910 pool," but we did not know of it at that time. It also shows how the B. T. Society was deserted by those who ought to have been its staunchest friends. They never could have been defeated and over-powered by the enemy if it had not been for the deserter. Are you one of them? You know where you stand. In talking with one of my neighbors a few days ago, he said he had just owned a little hill farm of a few acres, he said a man came to him this fall, a man like Duke, who could have had and sumptuously every day, and told him he could sell his tobacco for him at 14 cents if the pool went, and 12 cents if the pool did not go. This noble, poor man, looked at him with his clear, honest eyes, and said, "suppose we would all sell that way, what would become of the pool?" He said, "oh, the pool will stand anyway. It does not matter what per cent of the tobacco they sell, the officers will declare a pool. They will not want to lose their salaries," weighing the Tobacco Society in his scales; besides the Duke was so much interested in the pool they can't throw it down, and we can sell now and get our money at once."

Such argument bespeaks a small man though he may have money. A small man with such a small heart and brain that both rattle in a peanut shell. We are glad we are surrounded by neighbors like this poor man, who prizes principle above the almighty dollar. We love to mix and mingle with these, for we hope to meet them in that better world, but what will become of the soul of the other man? Nothing impure can enter heaven; it can not go to heaven and the Devil won't have any use for it. Its so shriveled it wouldn't make a park in the hottest times of hell, yet there is hope for even such dead and dry souls. Go read the vision of dry bones found in Ezekiel 37th chapter. "Son of man, can these dry bones live? Thou knowest Lord." God said to Ezekiel prophesy upon these dead bones. He prophesied there was a great noise—behold a shaking and the bones came together, bone to his bone. The flesh came upon them and the skin over them, and God said the wind to blow from the four corners and breath came into them and they stood up upon their feet, a great army. I already have a rattling line of those dry souls coming from the four corners of the tobacco belt, and may God breathe upon them that they may stand up like men—like this great army spoken of in Ezekiel for the deliverance of the farmer from the power of the Trust. May God send these dry souls with flesh and take away that stony heart and give them a heart of flesh that they may stand up like men—like our sympathy for their fellow-man. This poor man spoken of here needed the money for himself and family, but he thought of the welfare of the pool and the welfare of his neighbors. We are glad that we live surrounded by such men.

In 1908, by the strenuous effort of the good neighbors and friends, Joseph W. Cleek and others, we pooled every pound of tobacco in this precinct except two acres—a pretty good record for one that once convinced the people that the citizens of the Beaver precinct are law abiding citizens and don't believe in night riding or thieving. These two acres have been pooled, especially when it was owned by a stripping of a colored boy, who was allowed to stand up like men—like our sympathy for their fellow-man. Because we did not want a blur spot or wrinkle on the fair name of old Boone county.

Some of our men have fallen beneath the seductive influence of the evil one, but we have hope that they may be made to see the error of their way and come back to their first estate—the first love—place the welfare of their country first in their affections and crucify the flesh and the lust thereof, and then we will have no trouble about our organization. We will become true soldiers of civic righteousness and stand for every thing that is for the welfare of the country and not live for self alone, like Divies, that we may fare sumptuously every day for a little while and then die to lift up our eyes, being in torment, and ask some of those poor farmers, who have stood faithfully thru the storm, what they have borne the heat and burdens of the day, to dip their finger in water and cool your parched tongue. Oh how the tongue of those hired servants of the Trust must be parched even now, and except they repent they will need wells of water to cool them in the great day. The Duke is a good repent, God said of David the sweet singer of Israel, "he is a man after my own heart," no more than he is a man after being made to realize the enormity of his sins he repented and became a more faithful and efficient servant. So let us, like David, be good repenters and thus receive the commendation of our Father in heaven, and of love and wisdom of all true and upright citizens of this grand old Commonwealth. Stand nobly by our organization. No, its not a perfect organization. Yes, it has made mistakes. The Government of the U. S. is not perfect—it makes mistakes, but it is the best we can do. It is all we ought to be for, it even as imperfect as it may be. And for those who are spending time, energy and money to help make it better, this is a day of specialists—it is so in all lines of business. The physician gets a general knowledge of medicine and then devotes his time and energy to some special line, so with the lawyer and every other profession. Life is too short for any one man to accomplish it all.

The B. T. Society was organized for one special purpose—to advance the price of tobacco and look after our laws to see that we had justice, and it has done its work nobly. It is impossible for a farmer to raise tobacco and at the same time look after the laws, &c., to protect that tobacco from the greed of the Trust. We, like other farmers, would succeed must specialize, and its the special business of the B. T. Society to look after our interest as tobacco raisers. It was organized for that one special purpose—it is not of itself the society of Equity or the Grange or any other of these grand orders. These orders are good orders and have their places and were here a long time before the B. T. Society was ever thought of. They may be the parents of the Child, but they are not the child—it is separate and distinct. All the orders are not tobacco raisers. All members of the Society of Equity are not. In fact very few of them are. Therefore as orders they can not be especially interested in the tobacco question. The B. T. Society is the only order whose special and only business is to look after the price of your tobacco. We are to leave politics, religions, all orders and everything of the kind on the outside. You can become a member of this society and belong to all or belong to none of them, so you are a tobacco raiser and are especially interested in the tobacco question. We already have our organization, made up according to my estimation of as good, true and noble men as Kentucky, and surrounding States ever produced; men who could not be bought like some of our farmers with the bribes of the Trust. They stood true to your interest. The Trust offered Mr. LeBus $250,000 in 1908 to lay down and quit, and finding they could not buy the B. T. Society they bought the farmer—bought them up like sheep, and bought them as scabbies at scabby prices. Oh, my fellow farmers, you don't know how it grieves my heart to say these things, but as all of us have to stand before God to answer for his people in the tobacco question, we wouldn't be faithful to you if we failed to tell the whole truth, that we may see ourselves as our God sees us.

All we like David, are made to see the enormity of our sins. Realizing our mistakes let us repent of them and stand nobly by our organization. It is our own organization. These men at the head may not have been your choice, but they were elected by the majority, not by you or me, until the next election, and then they down every one of them who has not been faithful to your interest. Don't vote for your grand old man, not even for your grandpa if they are not tobacco raisers and especially interested in good prices for tobacco. These articles are too long and quick to suit me. We don't know about the reader. There are so many questions relative to this all important one that needs to be brought before the people as to the laws governing the tobacco question, &c., but we will close and give the other fellow a chance.

Keep up your local unions, discuss these questions in your county paper. No man is as intelligent as he ought to be, who does not talk for and read his county paper.

We want to say in closing what we have written has not been with any malice in our hearts toward anyone. We have kept the individuals of our mind while we were trying to write for the good of the cause. What we said applies to men in Bourbon, and Fayette, and the other counties. Present company is always excepted. You may misjudge and misunderstand me and feel hard toward me, but that will not keep me from loving you as a fellow farmer. Let us quit fighting with our neighbors; let none of our talks over be personal; let us exercise more reason and judgment than the poor cats spoken of in a former article, and set to work to gnaw the strings, and turn and expend the force and energy on the enemy—the fellow who tied us. Let us discuss questions and not people. There is not many of us, as individuals, who are worth discussing or discussing anyone.

Suffering so long himself, he feels for all distress from Backache, Nervousness, Loss of Appetite, Lassitude and Kidney disorders. He says that Electric Bittars work wonders for such troubles. "Five bottles," he writes, "wholly cured me and now I am well and hearty." It's also a powerful remedy for Liver Trouble, Dyspepsia, Blood Disorders, Female Complaints and Malaria. WHEN IS A MAN AT HIS BEST?

Line Is Being Pushed Further Back and He Who Is Past Fifty Need Not Be Ashamed of It.

When is a man best intellectually and physically? The answer was thus stated by a witty physician: "Most men are no good at their best." There is no rule for the extraordinary man. That Cato learned Greek at eighty affords no criterion. There is no measure for Napoleons; Lincoln defies the rules, and no school or method of instruction—not even by correspondence—will certainly teach the full measure of the patriotism that characterized Washington.

When is the average man at his best? That depends a good deal upon what is required of him. A prize fighter is old at thirty; most counselors-at-law are youthful at fifty, and for the ordinary pursuits every man is entitled to his "quest," and there shall be no decision. But it is certain that the dead line is being pushed further and further back upon age. Men are learning how to live; the comforts of life are more easily attainable; science intervenes in man's behalf, and the man who has passed fifty need not be ashamed of his years, because he may see for himself that there is a place for him by simply regarding the men long past that age who are actually carrying on the world's work.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

HON. LESLIE C. LITTELL, who is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of Kentucky, and is asking his friends to help him succeed in his aspiration. Mr. Littell is the publisher of the Owen County Democrat, and served Owen County as its representative in the Kentucky Legislature the last session, and was one of its ablest members. He introduced and fought through to success in both houses the bill to pension the ex-Confederate soldiers of Kentucky, and fostered every important measure for the good of the people before the legislature. Mr. Littell is well fitted for the position of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, having served in every capacity of the common school system in his county from teacher to County Superintendent, and discharging the duties thereof to the highest satisfaction of the people. His county is the second largest Democratic county in the State, and it has only had one State office since the war. Mr. Littell was born in Gallatin county, near Warsaw, and is a son of Cornelius Littell who died at Owenton last September. Mr. Littell is receiving great encouragement in his race from every section of the State. He is a splendid all-around gentleman of energy and enterprise and he would make a first-class superintendent.

Hanging on the Wall.
"The way pictures are hung makes such a lot of difference in the appearance of a room," said an interior decorator a few days ago. "That fact is thrust upon me nearly every day. I go into some parlors where the pictures are hung so high that all perspective is lost, and the ceiling seems to be hopelessly high. Other folks hang theirs so low that it hurts your spine to look at them, in addition to straining your eyes, spoiling the beauty of the room, and taking from the value of the picture."
"All pictures should not be hung on the same level, as they so often are, yet all should be as nearly on the level with the eyes as possible. If square and oblong pictures are alternated irregularly with round and oval ones the best possible effect is gained."

Blackstone's "Commentaries."
The first publication, the "Commentaries," was made by Blackstone to protect himself, for some students took notes of his lectures and these notes traveled into mercenary hands. The British museum possesses copies of all the editions of Blackstone—the exception of the third, so here is a chance for possessors of old libraries to search for the lost edition. Blackstone saw eight editions published, and a ninth was in the press at the time of his death. The "Commentaries" enjoy the distinction of having become the subject of a toast. Professor Dicey recommends the study of the "Commentaries" in their original form. "This, we believe, is the method adopted by American lawyers."—Law Magazine.

Greatness.
In olden times great men existed at the expense of others. Alexander and Napoleon were great by despoiling ordinary humankind. That will be no more. Greatness will be pure, moral, intellectual. In olden days contempt of humankind was necessary to become great. I do not share the common ill will against conquerors. Those who think Alexander a madman, who set Asia on fire for his pleasure, are fools. Where would the human spirit be if Alexander had not undertaken this marvelous expedition? No, wars and conquest were the instruments of progress. But this will be so no longer when the whole world will have become rational.—Ernest Renan.

Sand Grains Travel Far.
The travels of grains of sand have long been a matter of scientific record. Years ago it was established that particles picked up on the coast of Pas de Calais had their origin in the rocks of Brittany, from 120 to 180 miles distant. Another standard fact is the discovery on the coast of Denmark of chalk dust which undoubtedly came from the cliffs of Normandy.

To the Pearl Buyer.
"For every pearl you wear you will shed a tear," says an old adage; but the modern woman who knows the worth of the button pearl or the baroque is undaunted. The value of a pearl depends largely upon its tint, but there is a process of staining which often produces the pink of the oriental pearl. Only a connoisseur should invest in pearls alone. The good pearl is large, very round, smooth and iridescent.

First Telescope.
Very few people are aware that the first practical telescope—the one which Galileo used in discovering the satellites of Jupiter in January, 1610, is still in existence and preserved at the Museum of Physics and Natural History in Florence. It is about 300 years ago since the instrument was first turned toward the heavens. Unlike the present astronomical type, it had a concave instead of a convex eyepiece, just like the opera glasses now in use. When Galileo first exhibited his new telescope to the duke and an enthusiastic assembly, he was overwhelmed with honors, because it was thought that the instrument would give the soldiers and sailors of the republic a great advantage over their enemies.—Strand Magazine.

HUMAN BODY LIKE DYNAMO
Not a Storage Battery, Writer Says, but Manufactures its Energy According to Demand.

I have long been convinced that the well-trained human body is a dynamo or magneto which manufactures its energy according to the demand, and does not, like a storage battery, contain fixed quantity of stored-up energy or power, writes in the Forum says. A little reflection upon the great adaptability of the body to many varying conditions of existence tends strongly to confirm this view. It is well known that no other animal can exist under such a variety of climates and conditions, and upon such a diversity of foods as man. But it is not so well known, for example, that no other animal possesses the endurance and capacity for labor which man possesses. Yet it is inconceivable that any other animal than man could have performed Mr. Weston's task in the time he accomplished it. Whenever a horse's endurance has been tried against man's, the victory has seemed to lodge with the biped.

The average man's endurance of fatigue, like his endurance of heat and cold, fasting and feasting, great exertion and absolute rest, can be almost indefinitely increased. The only satisfactory explanation of this phenomenon is the preponderating influence of his spiritual nature. Man can train his body to do his bidding to a degree hitherto considered impossible, and evidently far beyond the capacity of a brute. The body, when properly trained, manufactures the energy it needs as it expends it. Our energy is not stored up within us to be drawn off as a dynamo was out of a tank, nor is our so-called vitality a fixed quantity. Great bodily strength, huge muscles and a deep chest do not necessarily indicate endurance, or a capacity for a long-sustained exertion. These attributes merely indicate the muscular and osseous foundations upon which an athlete's prowess may be developed. Man trains himself to great physical or mental efficiency by practice and care. He succeeds in endurance tests largely by will power.

A Historic Flirtation.
It seems an awful thing, but here is the circumstance on record that Louis M. Alcott, the student author of Little Women, once publicly flirted with Edward VII. The fact comes out in Mrs. Bella Moore's book, "Louisa May Alcott, Dreamer and Worker." There is a passage in the book which contains Miss Alcott's personal account of the incident; it refers to the time when the late king, then Prince of Wales, made his famous visit to this country. "I went to Boston," Miss Alcott relates, "and saw the Prince of Wales trot over the common with his train at review—a yellow-haired lad with very like his mother. Fanny V. and I nodded and waved as he passed and he openly winked his boyish eye at us, for Fanny with her yellow curls and wild waving looked rather rowdy and the poor little prince wanted some fun. We laughed and thought that, when he was more distinguished by the saucy wink than by a stately bow. Boys are always jolly—even princes." By the way, this incident occurred in 1860, when the Prince of Wales was 19 years old and consequently quite a brother of a boy, and when Miss Alcott was blushing to record it—was 24.

PENNY POSTAGE

Is Now Probable for First-Class Mail, Says Hitchcock.

Washington.—That the Postoffice Department will soon be self-sustaining and that penny postage will be a reality, letters from the probability of the near future are statements made by Postmaster Hitchcock.

Before the close of another fiscal year the federal postal establishment will become self-sustaining. This will be accomplished without curtailing in the slightest the service rendered or efficiency in any respect its efficiency.

This was the statement made by the postmaster general, in connection with the announcement that he had submitted to the Treasury Department, five days in advance of the time fixed by law, his estimates of appropriations for the Postoffice Department, and the postal service during the fiscal year beginning on July 1st.

In private conversation heretofore, Mr. Hitchcock has expressed his belief that it may be possible within a year or two, through the operation of plans he had worked out, to place the postal service on a paying basis. During the last fiscal year ended June 30 last he returned to the treasury about $8,000,000 out of the $10,000,000 appropriated by Congress for the department. The deficit of the department for that year was less than for any year since the reorganization, approximately one-half from the deficit of $17,000,000 of the year before.

It is the expectation of Mr. Hitchcock that the present deficit during the present fiscal year, and the estimates for 1912, which he transmitted to the Treasury Department, indicate a bright prospect for a still further reduction during that period.

By an effective reorganization of the Postoffice Department in Washington, and the introduction of labor saving devices, it has been possible, said Mr. Hitchcock, to reduce considerably the number of employees and at the same time to obtain increased efficiency in the handling of the larger volume of business. Similar methods of reorganization now are being applied to the entire postal service.

With the postal service able to pay its bills, Mr. Hitchcock is convinced that "penny postage" for first-class letters is not the "iridescent dream" it has been declared to be, and he is almost prepared to assert that it is a practical business proposition.

It would be unfair to tell the name of the author of this story, but it is too good to pass up.

In Tennessee not many years ago it was a sport and a science in some respects, to make the ballot boxes so that, no matter how the people voted, the machine candidates won. In one little town an enthusiast for honest government was named as one of the board of three election judges. His two companions were ready to slip into the ballot box enough voters to elect their candidate, but they could not get the honest judge to leave the voting booth long enough for them to turn the key.

The honest judge refused to leave long enough for lunch, all three went to a neighboring hotel for a hasty meal. The money for tobacco was very devout, put the ballot box on the floor between his feet and, shutting his eyes, bowed his head for several minutes while he asked the blessing on the meal.

While he was doing this the other two stuffed the box, and the machine candidates had a staggered majority. The judge, to day the honest judge advertises the fact that for once he made the election judges give the people of his town an honest deal.

With a roar that could be heard for a mile the ice gorge at Medock Ear, above Lawrenceburg, broke up the rise in the river early Wednesday morning, and beside endangering the lives of rivermen, destroyed several hundred dollars' worth of floating property that was hauled near Lawrenceburg. Those Little and George Sadler were sleeping in their houseboat near the Lawrenceburg Landing when the gorge broke. Tons of grinding ice bore down on their frail craft, and crushed the sides of the hull below the water line.

They escaped in a few scanty night clothes, carrying their most valuable property to safety. There is almost a complete loss. Other river property in the Lawrenceburg harbor escaped damage, although it was feared for a time that a valuable yacht belonging to Charles Ear, a local banker, would be carried away with the heavy flow of ice.

Lost-Gold tracetel between the upper landing at Lawrenceburg Ferry and the residence of H. C. Duncan. On the inside is the name of the person who lost it. Please return to H. C. Duncan and receive reward.

The heating plant in the new school house is ready to heat the building. Jailer Sammie Adams will have charge of it, consequently things in that locality will be kept warm alright.

The high water and floating ice in Gunpowder yesterday were too much for Elmer Conley to tackle, consequently only a few on rural mail route No. 2 were served yesterday.

The Business Principle

of successful lives is the habit of saving, depositing what can be safely in a good bank to meet the emergencies of the proverbial rainy day. A little at a time makes a snug sum in a short time. The Equitable Bank and Trust Co., Walton, Ky., will accept any sum on deposit and pays four per cent. interest on what remains a year, or three per cent. for what remains six months. Remittances by mail given prompt response and careful attention. This Bank has assets of over One Hundred Thousand Dollars. We qualify as administrator, executor, trustee, guardian, etc., of estates, which is much more satisfactory than a private individual in such capacity. Mail communications given careful attention. Your patronage solicited.
